But no title, legal or equitable, is acquired by a mortgage which is void under this section. Hall v. Slaughter, (1908) 155 Ala. 625, 47 So. 103.

Effect of fraudulent sale.—Where a homesteader commuted his land and paid for it, but before he had received a patent therefor, conveyed it, it was held that such conveyance and surrender of possession were not such an abandonment of the homestead as to destroy the federal exemption, but it was available to him after the conveyance was set aside as fraudulent. McCorkell v. Herron, (1905) 128 Ia. 324, 103 N. W. 988.

Proceeds of sale not exempt.—The rule that where a homestead, exempt under the state laws, is sold, the proceeds are exempt from garnishment for a reasonable time while in transition from the homestead sold to another purchaser, does not include proceeds arising from the sale of a federal homestead; the federal exemption being in the nature of a condition attached to the grant, under the federal power relating to the primary disposal of the land, and not extending to the proceeds of a sale. Ritzville Hardware Co. v. Bennington, (1908) 50 Wash. 111, 96 Pac. 826.

Vol. VI, p. 310, sec. 2297.

Jurisdiction of Land Department over contests.—The conclusiveness on the courts of a finding of the Land Department, made in allowing a homestead entry, of the sufficiency of settlement, residence, and improvements, is not affected by a later decision, in a second contest between the same parties, that the alienation of the land was a bar to supplemented proofs offered in aid of a premature commutation entry. Hill v. McCord, (1904) 195 U. S. 395, 25 S. Ct. 96, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 251, affirming (1903) 117 Wis. 306, 94 N. W. 65.

Abandonment consists in the intention to abandon and the external act or acts by which the intention is carried into effect. The abandonment of possessory rights upon the public domain is a question of fact as well as of intent. To find that real property has been abandoned, the evidence must show that the premises were left vacant without any intention of claiming possession, and with an intention to leave them open for the occupancy of any one who might choose to enter. Burr v. House, (1909) 3 Alaska 641.

Where a settler on public lands of the United States has established an actual residence and made improvements on the land, his removal therefrom and enforced absence by reason of conviction for crime will not work an abandonment. Huffman v. Smyth, (1906) 47 Ore. 573, 84 Pac. 80.

So long as a homestead entry of public land, valid on its face, remains of record, no entry can be made by another, and no rights can be acquired by occupancy, even though there has been an actual abandonment by the homestead entryman. U. S. v. Bagnell Timber Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 795.

A residence for voting purposes in another precinct from that in which a homestead entry lies precludes the entryman from claiming residence at the same time on the land for homestead purposes. Small v. Rakestraw, (1905) 196 U. S. 403, 25 S. Ct. 285, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 527, affirming (1903) 28 Mont. 413, 72 Pac. 746.

Vol. VI, p. 317, sec. 2301.

Proof.—In Hallock v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 417, it was said: "We can find no indication of a purpose to adopt the particular method of making proof required in homestead cases. The law says an entry may be commuted 'upon making proof of settlement and of residence and cultivation.' No provision appearing in the law the matter of witnesses to make the proof would properly be the subject of a departmental regulation, and, in the absence of one, the officials of the Land Office would be fully justified in following the practice that formerly obtained. An entryman would appear to be a competent witness of his own settlement, residence, and cultivation, and his false testimony respecting the same the subject of perjury."

This section prescribes, as requisite to commutation, proof only that the entryman has made settlement, cultivation, and residence for fourteen months, and does not require him to make oath that he has not alienated any portion of the land. Gilson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 484.

Payment.—Where a homestead settler on ceded lands of the Nez Perce Indian reservation, required to pay a stated price per acre by Act Aug. 15, 1894, ch. 290, 28 Stat. L. 326, and entitled to commute under this section, commuted, but paid less than the price required by the plain provision of the statute, and neither he nor a grantee, whose deed was not recorded and who had not taken possession, although notified of the suspension of his entry, tendered further payment until several months after his entry had been canceled and a new entry accepted on a relinquishment filed by him, a bill by the grantee to recover the land from the new entryman was held to show no equity which gave a court jurisdiction to review the action of the Land Department. Bailey v. Sanders, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 667.

Vol. VI, p. 318, sec. 1.

The right to confirmation under this Act, of a commutation entry under the homestead laws, which was only invalid because prematurely made, in actual ignorance of the amendment of R. S. sec. 2301, by Act March 3, 1891, ch. 561, 26 Stat. L. 1098, is not defeated by the entryman's subsequent efforts to protect his grantees by taking a reconveyance, and residing again upon the land, for the purpose of enabling him to make proof to secure the title for them. Hill v. McCord, (1904) 195 U. S. 395, 25 S. Ct. 96, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 251, affirming (1903) 117 Wis. 306, 94 N. W. 65.

Vol. VI, p. 321, sec. 2302.

Mineral lands not open to entry.—It is good ground for denying an application to make final proof and to procure a patent under the federal homestead law that the land is of mineral character, and hence, under this section, not open to entry. Jameson v. James, (1909) 155 Cal. 275, 100 Pac. 700.

Vol. VI, p. 324, sec. 2306.

Coal lands.—Public lands known to be chiefly valuable for their deposits of coal are not subject to acquisition under this section. Leonard v. Lennox, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 760.

Sale of certificate.—A soldier's additional homestead certificate may be sold and assigned by the soldier, and the assignee may enter land with it in Alaska. Gavigan v. Crary, (1905) 2 Alaska 370.

A purchaser in good faith and for value of a soldier's additional homestead scrip is not, as against the government issuing to him a patent, a bona fide purchaser, but the government may sue to cancel the patent. U. S. v. Gridley, (1911) 186 Fed. 544.

Contract to convey.—A contract by an entryman, under a soldier's additional homestead scrip, to convey title to a portion of the land when patent issues as agricultural land, is valid and enforceable, where the other party to the agreement was not disqualified to secure a patent as agricultural land. Murray v. White, (1911) 42 Mont. 423, 113 Pac. 754.

To induce the sale of an alleged additional homestead right, granted by this section, the defendant guaranteed that the documents which he then offered to sell were genuine and entitled the holder to acquire eighty acres of unappropriated government land, and that, if they should prove invalid, he would replace the same with other valid evidences or refund the money. This was held a guaranty of the validity as a matter of law of the documents, and that they would be accepted by the Land Department for the purposes stated. Lamson v. Coffin, (1907) 102 Minn. 493, 114 N. W. 248.

An assignment by a soldier of his right, under this section, to make an additional homestead entry of public land, which expressly designates the land to be entered, does not give the assignee the right, so far as the government is concerned, to locate other public land than that so designated; and where he is erroneously denied by the Land Office the right to make an entry of the land designated, and he acquiesces in such action, his transferee cannot, by mandamus, thirty years afterwards, compel the Secretary of the Interior to permit him to make entry of other public land under the assignment. U. S. v. Ballinger, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 392.

A soldier's additional homestead scrip is personal property and assignable, notwithstanding the opposed practice of the federal land office. Rogers v. Clark Iron Co., (1908) 104 Minn. 198, 116 N. W. 739.

The assignee of a soldier's additional homestead certificate, on filing an application for a specific tract of land at the government office, acquires an equitable title therein, which ripens into a legal title, relating back to the date of application on issuance of a government patent. Gilbert v. McDonald, (1905) 94 Minn. 289, 102 N. W. 712.

On the issuance of a patent to land as a soldier's additional homestead to one, his heirs and assigns, who had theretofore assigned his soldier's additional homestead scrip with an irrevocable power of attorney to make entry and to convey the land entered for the sole benefit of the person owning the right, the beneficial ownership passed to the assignee by the doctrine of relation or of enforced estoppel. Rogers v. Clark Iron Co., (1908) 104 Minn. 198, 116 N. W. 739.

Void certificate.—Where complainant applied to enter public land with a void soldier's additional certificate, and his invalid application was rejected, such application was not an entry of the land, but a mere application to enter, and, having been rejected, complainant was not entitled to additional time within which to obtain another right with which to enter the land as against the holder of a valid application for the land received and pending at the time complainant made his application for additional time. Robinson v. Lundrigan, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 230.

Vol. VI, p. 326, sec. 1. [Act of June 16, 1880.]

Award by secretary not subject to review.—The Secretary of the Interior is authorized by this section "to repay to such innocent parties the fees and commissions and excess payments paid by them," and his award is not subject to the approval or review of the accounting officers. Denny v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 162.

Vol. VI, p. 326, sec. 2.

A mortgagee, who has foreclosed his mortgage and purchased the mortgaged property at sheriff's sale under a decree of the court, is an "assign" within the meaning of this section. U. S. v. Commonwealth Title Ins., etc., Co., (1904) 193 U. S. 651, 24 S. Ct. 546, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 830, affirming (1902) 37 Ct. Cl. 532.

A surrender of the duplicate receipt required by this section, as a condition of the repayment of the purchase price, where an entry of public land has been canceled for conflict, will be presumed from a finding that the Secretary of the Interior ordered repayment "on the relinquishment by the claimants of all claim to the land so canceled," and a further finding that the relinquishment was made "as required by the rules and regulations of the Land Office." U. S. v. Commonwealth Title Ins., etc., Co., (1904) 193 U. S. 651, 24 S. Ct. 546, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 830, affirming (1902) 37 Ct. Cl. 532.

When money will not be refunded.—Where the money paid to the defendants' officers at the time of making an entry was that of a coal company, to whom the person making the entry had previously quitclaimed the land, he cannot maintain an action to recover it back under this section though the entry was subsequently set aside by the Secretary of the Interior, and the money is still in the Treasury. Stoiber v. U. S., (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 269.

Vol. VI, p. 327. [Invalid soldiers' additional homestead entries may be commuted.]

This statute confines the right to purchase the land to cases where homestead entries have been made or initiated on a certificate of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the right to make such entry, and then only in cases where there is no adverse claimant, and the department therefore has no power to make a rule cutting off the right of an adverse claimant. Robinson v. Lundrigan, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 230.

Vol. VI, p. 330, sec. 2315.

An exception from a railroad grant of lands which should be found to be "occupied by homestead settlers . . . or otherwise disposed of" includes lands so occupied with an intention to obtain title thereto under the homestead law, although no application for entry thereof had been made; and also lands for which such application had been made and accepted, whether occupied by the claimant at the time or not, such lands being within the term "otherwise disposed of." U. S. v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 953.

Vol. VI, p. 332, sec. 2355.

Description of land.—This section requires the applicant to describe in a written application the tract he desires to enter "by the proper number of the section . . . and of the township and range." Upon this application, according to the established practice of the Land Department, the register is required to act in issuing the patent certificate, and it will be presumed that he performed his legal duty and issued the certificate in exact conformity to the description of the land given in the application. Le Marchal v. Tegarden, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 682.

An application for a change of entry of public land on the ground of a mistake in the description is necessarily governed by this section which is the only statute applicable, in whatever form the question may be presented; the entry can only be transferred to a tract which is "unsold," and where it will not affect the right of third persons; and a decision of the Secretary of the Interior transferring such an entry to a tract upon which a homestead entry has subsequently been made in good faith by another who has made valuable improvements, completed his residence, made final proof, and received his final certificate which vested in him the equitable title, is wholly unauthorized and erroneous in law. Le Marchal v. Tegarden, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 682.

The word "disposal," as used in this section, must be construed to mean "distribution" when applied to lots actually occupied and possessed, for such lots are already disposed of; that is, they became the property of the occupants. Scully v. Squier, (1907) 13 Idaho 417, 90 Pac. 573.

Nature of trust and title, and authority of trustees.—On the establishment of a town site on public land, a legal title is vested in the trustee in his official and public capacity, and, simultaneously with the entry, there is vested in the beneficiaries an absolute right in the trust. McCloskey v. Pacific Coast Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 794.

The trustee takes title for the individual occupants of the town, and also for the occupants collectively as a community, and therefore has no power as against the individual occupants to dedicate land in the site to public use for street purposes. McCloskey v. Pacific Coast Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 794.

A certificate of title to townsite land, executed by the county judge to one who never occupied the land certified to him and who never had any right to occupy it, conveyed no title. Roberts v. Ward, (1906) 3 Cal. App. 101, 84 Pac. 430.

Portions of the public land which have been settled upon and occupied as a town site may be entered by the probate judge or mayor in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof, according to their respective interests. Boise City v. Wilkinson, (1909) 16 Idaho 150, 102 Pac. 148.

A district judge who acts as trustee of a town site under this section, acts by virtue of his office as judge, and he is not an inferior officer to his associate judge of the district. Jennett v. Stevens, (Nev. 1910) 111 Pac. 1025.

Occupancy and rights of occupants.—The "occupants" for whom the trustees take the legal title under the Act are those who were such at the time the town site was entered. Globe v. Slack, (1908) 11 Ariz. 408, 95 Pac. 126.

A person who uses a lot in Alaska, and occupies it in good faith with buildings or other improvements, which show his intention to possess and claim it under the town-site law, although he may not reside on it, can acquire title thereto. Sawyer v. Van Hook, (1900) 1 Alaska 108.

Whoever enters on a vacant town lot, and makes the first act of settlement or occupancy in good faith, with the intention of following it up and claiming the benefit of the law, is the first settler or occupant, and is entitled to acquire the title. Sawyer v. Van Hook, (1900) 1 Alaska 108.

Legislative regulations.—The execution of the trust as to the disposal of the town lots and the proceeds of the sale thereof, is authorized to be conducted under such regulations as may be prescribed by the legislative authority of the state or territory in which the same is situated. Boise City v. Wilkinson, (1909) 16 Idaho 150, 102 Pac. 148.

A local statute providing the method of executing the trust, and requiring the payment by the "claimant" to the trustee of the purchase price of five dollars per lot before he is entitled to a deed, applies to actual occupants, and not only to those who merely claim the right to possession; and an occupant, to be entitled to his deed, must be a claimant, file his statement, and pay to the trustee the purchase price. Robertson v. Martin, (1904) 8 Ariz. 422, 76 Pac. 614.

The rights of the occupants of town-site lots, fixed by the extent of their occupancy, cannot be diminished by conveyances from the mayor trustee according to the plat made and filed under a local act, enacted pursuant to this section to provide for the disposal of the lots—especially where the state Supreme Court construes such statute as not giving the power to make a survey or plat which did not conform to the lines of occupation. Scully v. Squier, (1909) 215 U. S. 144, 30 S. Ct. 51, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 131, affirming (1907) 13 Idaho 417, 90 Pac. 573.

Streets.—The streets contemplated by this Act, and as to which a public right attaches, are those which in fact existed at the time of the town-site entry either by actual use or dedication; the trustee being without authority by any act of his own to dedicate a street. McCloskey v. Pacific Coast Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 794.

It is competent for the legislature, under this section, to authorize the trustee of such town sites to divide unoccupied land within the town sites into lots and blocks and dispose of them for the public benefit, and to that end establish streets and alleys to such unoccupied land. Globe v. Slack, (1908) 11 Ariz. 408, 95 Pac. 126.

Vol. VI, p. 351, sec. 2392.

Mining claim.—A town-site entry can give no title to a valid mining claim, though it was not known at the time that the claim contained minerals of sufficient value to justify expenditure for extracting them. Callahan v. James, (1903) 141 Cal. 291, 74 Pac. 853.

A valid and subsisting mining claim on land covered by a town-site patent at the time the patent was issued does not pass thereunder, nor is the title or right of possession affected thereby. Golden v. Murphy, (1909) 31 Nev. 395, 103 Pac. 394.

But a town-site patent issued by the Land Office officials cannot be collaterally attacked by private parties locating mining claims subsequent to the entry of the town site and issuance of the patent, on the theory that the land covered by the patent was known to be mineral at the time of its entry, and hence did not pass by the patent under this section. Board of Education v. Mansfield, (1903) 17 S. D. 72, 95 N. W. 286.

Vol. VI, p. 355, sec. 1.

A rule of the Secretary of the Interior, which requires a contestant before town-site trustees, appointed under this section, to deposit a certain sum with the treasurer of the board before a cause will be heard, is a reasonable rule, which a court of equity will uphold; but a failure to comply with such rule will not render void a judgment of a court of general common law and chancery jurisdiction, where the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and of the parties to the action. Thurston v. Washington, (1907) 18 Okla. 362, 90 Pac. 16.

Use of public street.—The selection of a lot in a projected town site in Oklahoma, in accordance with a plat agreed upon by a portion of the occupants at or near the date of the opening to settlement, does not vest such an unconditional title in the selector as will prevail against the right of Oklahoma City to the use and occupation of the lot as a public street under a subsequent survey, made or approved pursuant to this Act by trustees appointed to make town-site entries for the several use and benefit of the occupants, the selector not being an occupant thereof when the trustees made entry of the land, nor when the conveyance to them was made by the government. Oklahoma City v. McMaster, (1905) 196 U. S. 529, 25 S. Ct. 324, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 587, reversing (1903) 12 Okla. 570, 73 Pac. 1012.

Appeal from decision of trustees.—Neither the Commissioner of the General Land Office nor the Secretary of the Interior can entertain an appeal from a decision of a board of town-site trustees, appointed in pursuance of this Act, after a deed to a town lot has been made and delivered, notwithstanding an appeal was pending at the time of such issuance and delivery. The functions and jurisdiction of that department necessarily close when the title has passed from the government. Brooks v. Garner, (1908) 20 Okla. 236, 94 Pac. 694.

Vol. VI, p. 361, sec. 1.

Opening and occupation of land.—Whatever uncertainty may have existed as to the intention of Congress as to when mineral claimants might lawfully enter upon these lands for the purpose of prospecting for minerals and locating mineral claims prior to the enactment of this statute, there can be no serious contention now as to what the purpose of the law-making power was as drawn from the provision of both Acts; Congress left the manner of the opening to settlement and entry of these lands to be determined by the President, and made it his duty to incorporate the rules and regulations adopted by him into the proclamation to be issued announcing the opening; and every person, whether seeking to discover minerals or to acquire settlement as a homestead claimant, was prohibited from settling upon, occupying, or entering any of said lands until sixty days after the time for opening the same to settlement and entry had expired. Bay v. Oklahoma Southern Gas, etc., Co., (1903) 13 Okla. 425, 73 Pac. 938.

The proclamation of the President was issued July 4, 1901, and fixed the opening day on Aug. 6, 1901, and contains the express warning that "no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands except in the manner prescribed in this proclamation until after the expiration of sixty days from the time when the same are opened to settlement and entry." Bay v. Oklahoma Southern Gas, etc., Co., (1903) 13 Okla. 425, 73 Pac. 936.

The board of county commissioners of Comanche county, Okla., has no power or authority to allow any claim against the county revenues and issue a warrant prior to Dec. 15, 1903, unless the contracting or incurring of such indebtedness was first authorized by the Secretary of the Interior. Indian Territory Bank v. Eckles, (1907) 19 Okla. 159, 91 Pac. 695.

Public lands are to be surveyed into townships six miles square, and each in turn subdivided into thirty-six sections of a mile square, except where a line of an Indian reservation, or the tracts of land theretofore surveyed or patented, or the course of navigable rivers, may render this impracticable, and in that case this rule must be departed from no further than such particular circumstances require. Johnson v. Johnson, (1908) 14 Idaho 561, 95 Pac. 499.

Even after a principal meridian and a base line are established and the exterior lines of the township surveyed, the sections or subsections do not have a legal existence, until they are established by an approved survey under authority of Congress. Smith v. Los Angeles, (1910) 158 Cal. 702, 112 Pac. 307.

Lost corners.—There is no provision relating to the rules to be followed where corners have been lost, either in the statute or in the circular of instructions approved by the Secretary of the Interior, Oct. 16, 1896 (23 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 361), relating to lost or obliterated corners, for a proportionate measurement based on the deficiency in acreage of adjoining parcels of land; and, where there is no question as to the establishment of a lost corner, the exact boundaries as shown on the government plat must prevail, and they will control a further description by quantity. Somers v. McMordie, (1909) 155 Cal. xvi mem., 99 Pac. 482.

Meandered waters.—Where lands front upon navigable streams, and a line meandering the margin of such stream is run for the purpose of ascertaining the quantity of land to be paid for, such meander line is not regarded as a boundary line, but only points out the sinuosities of the bank for the purpose of arriving at the area of land to be paid for. Johnson v. Johnson, (1908) 14 Idaho 561, 95 Pac. 499.

Vol. VI, p. 367, sec. 2396.

Statute prevails over department rule.—The Act naturally prevails over a rule of the Land Department where an inconsistency arises. O'Connor v. Detroit, (1910) 160 Mich. 193, 125 N. W. 277.

A surveyor who establishes the line between the southeast and southwest quarters of a section containing no quarter section posts set by the United States surveyors by surveying only the south half of the section, and ascertaining the north quarter section corner between the two quarter sections by running a line from the southeast corner of the section to the northeast corner of the quarter section, and from the southwest corner of the section to the northwest corner of the quarter section, and connecting the two quarter section corners by a line running east and west, and dividing that line equally between the two quarter sections, does not adopt the method prescribed by this section, and such survey does not establish the boundary. Phillips v. Hink, (1908) 21 S. D. 561, 114 N. W. 699.

An east and west quarter section line is not necessarily the same as a division line between the north half and the south half of a donation land claim. Bernheim v. Talbot, (1909) 54 Ore. 30, 100 Pac. 1107.

Government lots bordering on a nonnavigable stream are bounded by the thread of the stream, and not by the meander line on the bank. Kirby v. Potter, (1903) 138 Cal. 686, 72 Pac. 338.

Excess should be divided among the owners on the basis of a line, extending from a point on the south line of the quarter section equidistant from its corners to a like point

Swamp lands.—The title to lands embraced within patents from the United States in pursuance of the Swamp Land Act of Sept. 28, 1850, ch. 84 (9 Stat. L. 520), cannot be affected by a resurvey of the land covered by water at the time of the original survey, and patents granted, pursuant to such resurvey, for tracts below the original water line. Kean v. Calumet Canal, etc., Co., (1903) 190 U. S. 452, 23 S. Ct. 651, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 1134.

Survey will not be enjoined.—The courts cannot interfere with the executive administration of the Land Department by enjoining, at the instance of persons claiming to be the owners of the land, a survey, under the direction of such department, of certain lands lying between an alleged meander line and the actual waters of a lake, which are claimed by the department to be unsurveyed public lands of the United States. Kirwan v. Murphy, (1903) 189 U. S. 35, 23 S. Ct. 599, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 698.

The prevention of irreparable injury and of a multiplicity of suits cannot be invoked as grounds for equitable relief against a threatened survey, under direction of the Land Department, of lands to which complainants assert title, but which the department claims to be unsurveyed public lands of the United States, where such survey can be made without material injury to the soil or timber, and the persons directly interested in such survey are not made parties, are not numerous, and assert separate and independent rights. Kirwan v. Murphy, (1903) 189 U. S. 35, 23 S. Ct. 599, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 698.

A location of land under a military land warrant accompanied by a record of entry in the proper office removes the land from the general domain of the government open to purchase or settlement, and the legal title is held by the government in the nature of a trust for the one showing himself entitled to the benefit of the location. Herrick v. Sargent, (1908) 140 Ia. 590, 117 N. W. 751.

After the issuance of a military bounty land warrant and the location of land thereunder, and approval of the location by the Land Department, the locator obtains such an equity as the state and federal courts will protect, and one which gives him an absolute right to the patent and the legal title, rendering a patent issued to another in violation of his equity void. Price v. Dennis, (1909) 159 Ala. 625, 49 So. 248.

Assignment of warrant.—Bounty warrants issued in recognition of service to the government are assignable. Wilcox v. Phillips, (1906) 199 Mo. 288, 97 S. W. 886.

Vol. VI, p. 392, sec. 1. [Reclamation and purchase of desert lands, etc.]

This Act applies only to waters of the United States.—Winters v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 740.

Water on two tracts of land.—Where an owner of land consisting of two tracts, one of which was his brother's pre-emption, which had been transferred to him, and the other a claim taken by him under the Desert Land Act, made an appropriation prior to any other person of certain water of a stream, the head of which was on his brother's pre-emption, it was held that the appropriation entitled the appropriator to a sufficient amount of water to irrigate the land to which the appropriation was intended to be applied at the time, whether it was on the desert land claim or the pre-emption. Williams v. Altnow, (1908) 51 Ore. 275, 95 Pac. 201, 97 Pac. 539.

An unreserved decree perpetually enjoining a water company from maintaining a dam or any other obstruction, and from preventing the waters of the lake from reaching another's premises as they were wont to do in their natural condition, is conclusive on the rights of the water company, and in a separate suit it cannot assert any rights inconsistent with the decree, and cannot urge that the waters of the lake were, under this Act, public and open to appropriation at the time it diverted the water. Spokane Valley Land, etc., Co. v. Jones, (1909) 53 Wash. 37, 101 Pac. 515.

A local law providing that a portion of the water of nonnavigable streams and bodies of water shall be reserved to that part of the public using or needing the water on abutting property, is not inconsistent with this Act. State v. Superior Ct., (1907) 47 Wash. 310, 91 Pac. 968.

Relinquishment of desert land.—One in possession of desert land open to filing under the Desert Land Act may surrender the possession to another, and file a relinquishment of his right to file thereon, and the latter taking possession may file thereon, and obtain a patent on complying with the law. Moore v. Grofftholdt, (1909) 10 Cal. App. 714, 103 Pac. 149.

Vol. VI, p. 394, sec. 2.

This section conditions the right to make the preliminary entry upon the making of a declaration under oath of an intention to reclaim the land by conducting water upon the same, and conditions the right to make final entry upon the making of satisfactory proof of reclamation by that means. Snyder v. Colorado Gold Dredging Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 62.

Vol. VI, p. 399, sec. 2479.

Grant in presenti.—This Act is a grant in presenti of the equitable title to all swamp and overflowed lands within the boundary of any state; to perfect the legal title it is necessary that the Secretary of the Interior at the request of the governor should patent the same to the state, and on that patent the fee simple to such land is vested in the state as of the date of the passage of the Act. Kittel v. Florida Internal Imp. Fund, (1905) 139 Fed. 941.

The title of the state does not depend on the actual issuance to it of a patent. Foss v. Johnstone, (1910) 158 Cal. 119, 110 Pac. 294.

As soon as the land inures to the state as swamp land the title refers back to the dates of the original grants. Hartigan v. Weaver, (1910) 126 La. 492, 52 So. 674.

A title by patent from the United States is a title by record without a delivery to the patentee, and a patent from the United States to a state of swamp lands is competent evidence as against the objection that it does not show that it was ever received by the state or any officer authorized to receive it. Warner Valley Stock Co. v. Morrow, (1906) 48 Ore. 258, 86 Pac. 369.

Ratification by state.—A grant by the United States of land that has passed to the State under this Act may be ratified and affirmed by the state. Railroad Lands Co. v. Shreveport, (1906) 117 La. 140, 41 So. 443.

The acceptance by the state of lands certified to it by the Secretary of the Interior as swamp and overflowed is conclusive on the state as to the title to and character of the lands so certified and subsequently sold by the state as such. Chauvin v. Louisiana Oyster Commission, (1907) 121 La. 10, 46 So. 38.

Vol. VI, p. 404, sec. 2480.

Identification and patent perfect title in state.—The swamp land grant to the states does not attach to any particular lands pass-

Whether land is swamp land is a question of fact, solely for the determination of the Land Department of the United States, and its judgment thereon is final, in the absence of fraud or mistake. Morrow v. Warner Valley Stock Co., (1909) 56 Ore. 312, 101 Pac. 171.

Where land has been identified by the federal authorities intrusted with that duty, as land which did not pass to the state under this Act, parol evidence is not admissible to prove that the land was in fact swamp land in 1850, so that, by virtue of the grant, it became the property of the state. Foss v. Johnstone, (1910) 158 Cal. 119, 110 Pac. 294.

Swamp lands, as distinguished from overflowed lands, are such as require drainage to dispose of needless water or moisture on or in the lands, in order to make them fit for successful and useful cultivation. State v. Gerbing, (1908) 56 Fla. 603, 47 So. 353.

Overflowed lands are those that are covered by nonnavigable waters, or are subject to such periodical or frequent overflows of water, salt or fresh (not including lands between ordinary high and low water marks of navigable waters) as to require drainage or levees or embankments to keep out the waters and thereby render the lands suitable for successful cultivation. State v. Gerbing, (1908) 56 Fla. 603, 47 So. 353.

Lands belonging to the United States, that were not covered by navigable waters at ordinary high-water mark, and that required drainage or leveeing to render them suitable for the ordinary purposes of husbandry at the time this Act was passed are included in the Act. State v. Gerbing, (1908) 56 Fla. 603, 47 So. 353.

ing thereunder, until they have been identified as swamp lands by the Secretary of the Interior or other competent authority of the United States. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 884; U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 818.

The state does not take the equitable title to or any interest in any particular tract of land under this Act until the same has been identified by the list made or approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and can make no conveyance of any such title or right as against the general government. Kerns v. Lee, (1906) 142 Fed. 985.

As title to the state does not vest in the state any particular tract of lands until identification by the Secretary of Interior as swamp land, under the absolute power of Congress to legislate for disposal of public domain, it could have withdrawn any particular tract from the operation of Swamp Land Acts, and could have provided for its disposition under any general law. Morrow v. Warner Valley Stock Co., (1909) 56 Ore. 312, 101 Pac. 171.

Survey necessary.—Swamp lands cannot be selected by the state and approved by the Secretary of the Interior under this Act until a survey thereof has been made. State v. Warner Valley Stock Co., (1910) 56 Ore. 283, 106 Pac. 780, 108 Pac. 861. See also Hall v. Bossier Levee Dist., (1904) 111 La. 913, 35 So. 976.

Where a subdivision of land was granted to the state as swamp lands, the grant carried all the land in the subdivision, whether dry or overflowed, since those Acts provide

A purchaser from the state of swamp lands granted to it by this Act, who receives from the state a certificate of purchase prior to the state obtaining a patent from the federal government, obtains the equitable title. Hibben v. Malone, (1908) 85 Ark. 584, 109 S. W. 1008.

The title of a patentee to swamp land under a patent issued by the state relates back, on the issuance of a patent by the United States, to the date of the grant to the state. Warner Valley Stock Co. v. Morrow, (1906) 48 Ore. 258, 86 Pac. 369.

One who purchased swamp land from the United States after the swamp land grant, but before the confirmatory Act of 1857, obtained a good title. Cotton Belt Lumber Co. v. Kelly, (1905) 74 Ark. 400, 86 S. W. 436, rehearing denied 74 Ark. 405, 86 S. W. 827.

The office of a patent of swamp and overflowed lands granted to the state by this Act, is to make the description of the lands definite and conclusive as between the United States and the state, for identification is necessary to determine whether any particular tract comes within the general description of swamp and overflowed land so as to pass by the grant. Foss v. Johnstone, (1910) 158 Cal. 119, 110 Pac. 294.

that all subdivisions shall be granted, the greater part of which is swamp land subject to overflow. Hall v. Bossier Levee Dist., (1904) 111 La. 913, 35 So. 976.

Vol. VI, p. 409, sec. 2483.

Patents for swamp lands issued by the state are conclusive evidence of the legal title, unless something to the contrary is shown.

Belcher v. Harr, (1910) 94 Ark. 221, 126 S. W. 714.

Vol. VI, p. 411, sec. 2488.

A grant to the state of swamp lands unfit for cultivation, and requiring the Secretary of the Interior to make a list of the lands described and cause a patent to be issued to the state, is conditional and is limited to the lands listed by the Secretary of the Interior as lands described, and this Act does not alter the binding effect of the decision as to the lands described; and, where a decision is sought to be revised on the ground of fraud or mistake, the revision must be by direct proceeding for that purpose. Foss v. Johnstone, (1910) 158 Cal. 119, 110 Pac. 294.

This Act supersedes all previous rules and methods of identifying swamp lands, and land represented on an official township plat, approved by the United States Surveyor-general, and acquiesced in by the state authorities, as land covered by the waters of a permanent pond, so as to belong to the United States, is a determination that the land is not swamp land; and an applicant to purchase the land from the state acquires no title as against a prior patentee from the federal government of the land bordering on the pond, since the survey made in pursuance of the applicant's application is not a segregation map within the prescribed method of identifying swamp lands. Foss v. Johnstone, (1910) 158 Cal. 119, 110 Pac. 294.

Vol. VI, p. 412, sec. 2490.

The legal title of the state will not relate back to the date of the act, thereby giving stability to deeds of the state made prior to the receipt of the patent by the state, where the effect would be to invalidate the title of persons who had taken the lands under the homestead and pre-emption laws after the passage of the Swamp Land Act, but before the issuance of the patent. Morrow v. Warner Valley Stock Co., (1909) 56 Ore. 312, 101 Pac. 171.

Prior to the selection and approval by the Secretary of the Interior of swamp and overflowed lands, the United States can dispose of such lands under the general laws, and the state cannot, by any contract with third parties prior to such action by the Secretary of the Interior, interfere with the acts of intending settlers under the land laws. Morrow v. Warner Valley Stock Co., (1909) 56 Ore. 312, 101 Pac. 171.

Swamp lands transferred to the state under this section may be taken under the homestead law after the passage of the Act granting the swamp lands to the state, and before the land taken under such homestead law has been identified by the Secretary of the Interior as swamp land, and as belonging to the state under the grant. Morrow v. Warner Valley Stock Co., (1909) 56 Ore. 312, 101 Pac. 171.

The state has no duty to perform in such selection, and a selection of swamp lands made by its officers under an Act of its Legislature is not binding upon the United States, unless approved and confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, and gave the state no equitable title to or vested right in any of the lands so selected, which it could convey to another, where the selection has not been ratified and confirmed by the Secretary. Kerna v. Lee, (1906) 142 Fed. 985.

This Act does not operate against the will of the state; and where the state fails to select, and the Secretary of the Interior fails to approve, certain lands as falling within the terms of those statutes, and such lands have been certified to and accepted by the state under the Act of Congress of 1856 (11 Stat. L. 18), granting lands in aid of railroads, the title thus acquired by the railroads cannot be defeated by an individual claiming to have purchased the lands as swamp lands, and whose title has been annulled at the suit of the state. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Tibbs, (1904) 112 La. 151, 36 So. 223.

Vol. VI, p. 414, sec. 18.

A homestead entry on land in Oklahoma Territory, which is valid upon its face, although made by one in fact personally disqualified to make a valid entry, prevents the initiation of homestead rights by another while it remains uncanceled of record by some direct action of the Land Office or by relinquishment. McMichael v. Murphy, (1905)

One holding land by virtue of a receiver's final certificate prior to issue of patent is not seized in fee simple of the land described in such certificate, and is not on account

Vol. VI, p. 423, sec. 2.

Who are settlers.—This Act recognizes only the right of an individual settler who was in actual occupation of a portion of a military reservation prior to the location of the reservation, or prior to Jan. 1, 1884, in good faith, for the purpose of securing a home. State v. Tanner, (1905) 73 Neb. 104, 102 N. W. 235.

The rights acquired by actual occupation and settlement of land subsequently set apart as a military reservation, recognized by this Act, are the "lawful rights" which it is declared shall not be prejudiced in Act Cong. March 3, 1893, ch. 200, 27 Stat. L. 555, granting lands from an abandoned military reservation to the state as indemnity school lands, in lieu of other lands theretofore lost. State v. Tanner, (1905) 73 Neb. 104, 102 N. W. 235.

Vol. VI, p. 425, sec. 1.

This Act does not impair the rights of the state to select indemnity school lands within the time and manner contemplated by Act Cong. March 3, 1893, ch. 200, 27 Stat. L. 555. State v. Tanner, (1905) 73 Neb. 104, 102 N. W. 235.

Vol. VI, p. 433. [Rights of licensed settlers on railroad lands, etc.]

The right given a settler is not defeated by the fact that after the withdrawal has been set aside the land is included within the boundaries of a forest reservation, created by proclamation of the president, before it has been surveyed so as to give the settler an opportunity to purchase. Holmes v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1902) 118 Fed. 995.

Vol. VI, p. 433, sec. 1.

The sole scope and purpose of this Act is to restore to the Land Department of the government its exclusive jurisdiction to primarily determine all questions affecting rights to the public lands, which through fraud or mistake it has lost by an erroneous certification or patenting with respect to the lands in question, and such act confers no jurisdiction on the courts to determine, in a suit brought thereunder, the right of the railroad company grantee to the lands involved or of an adverse claimant thereto. Sage v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 65.

Validity.—This Act and the Act of March 2, 1896, ch. 39, 29 Stat. L. 42 [6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 449], are independent acts passed by Congress in the exercise of its constitutional power to protect the property of the United States, and their validity is not dependent on any reservation of the power of repeal in the original granting acts. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 96.

Vol. VI, p. 435, sec. 2.

This section authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to adjust railroad land grants heretofore unadjusted; and it provides that, if it shall appear that any lands have been erroneously patented to any railroad company, the secretary is authorized to make demand for relinquishment or reconveyance of the same; and it also provides that, if the grantee company shall refuse to reconvey within ninety days, then it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence and prosecute in the proper courts the necessary proceedings to cancel such patents and restore the title to the United States. U. S. v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., (1903) 122 Fed. 541. See also Lyle v. Patterson, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 909.

A court of equity has jurisdiction of a suit by the United States against a railroad company, its mortgagees, and others to ascertain and determine what portion of lands erroneously patented to the company under a grant have been sold to bona fide purchasers, the rights of other purchasers holding under executory contracts to obtain a confirmation of the title of such bona fide purchasers, and for the cancellation of the patents to the lands which have not been so disposed of, and an accounting from the company for moneys received for lands sold, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, such court being the only one which can furnish a plain, complete, and adequate remedy which will reach the ends of justice with reference to all the parties and issues. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (1904) 133 Fed. 651, 66 C. C. A. 581, affirming (1902) 117 Fed. 544; U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 96.

Even irrespective of this Act the federal government has the right to sue a railroad company to recover the value of lands erroneously patented to such company, and sold by it to persons who dealt with it in good faith. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (1906) 200 U. S. 341, 26 S. Ct. 296, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 507, affirming (1904) 133 Fed. 651, 66 C. C. A. 581.

But such suit is authorized only after a determination by the Land Department that the land has been sold by the company to a bona fide purchaser, whose purchase is protected by the acts, on a claim made by or on behalf of such purchaser; and where no such claim has been made, but it appears that there is a basis for one, equity has jurisdiction of a suit by the United States against the company to recover the land or the price, as the facts may appear. Oregon, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 832, affirming (1904) 133 Fed. 953.

The decree, in a suit by the United States against a railroad company to determine its right to certain lands under a grant, in which the only question determined was that the lands did not pass to defendant under the grant, but were erroneously patented to it, is not a bar to a second suit brought under this section to recover from the company the price of the lands on an allegation that they had been sold by defendant to bona fide purchasers whose title had been confirmed under the provisions of this Act. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 737.

Where lands have been erroneously certified or patented by the United States, to or for the use of a railroad company, by, through, or under grant from the United States, to aid in the construction of a railroad, then it became the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to demand the relinquishment or reconveyance of such lands to the United States, whether within granted or indemnity limits; and if such demand was not complied with by a named time, then the Attorney-General was to institute the necessary proceedings to cancel all patents, certificates, or other evidence of title issued for such lands, and to restore the title to the United States. Provision was made for the protection, by patents, of purchasers in good faith from the grantee company, and the Secretary of the Interior was required to demand, on behalf of the United States, "payment from the company which has so disposed of such lands of an amount equal to the government price for similar lands;" and if payment was refused, within a time named, "the Attorney-General was to institute suits against the company for such amount." U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 218 U. S. 233, 31 S. Ct. 7, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1015.

Where it is shown that a tract of land was certified and patented under a railroad grant while an application for a homestead entry thereon was pending on appeal in the Land Department which, through mistake, had not been entered upon the records, thus depriving the department of the power to determine the homestead claimant's rights on the merits, a case of erroneous patenting is made out, which entitles the government to a cancellation of the patent in a suit brought therefor under this Act. Sage v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 65.

Certain public lands having been conditionally reserved for Indians at the date of a railroad grant, and which did not pass thereunder, were, nevertheless, in accordance with the then existing construction of such grants by the government Land Department, certified as a part of the grant; the lands having been withdrawn from the reservation at the time the railroad's line was definitely located. Both parties assumed that the lands were properly covered by the grant for several years, during which time the railroad company paid taxes thereon in excess of the government price, and sold the lands to innocent purchasers for value. After filing the railroad's map of definite location, the United States disposed of more than 23,000 acres of lands which were available to the railroad company under its grant in lieu of the land in question, and the railroad failed to obtain its full quota of land because of a deficiency existing on a part of its line to the extent of five times the amount of the value of the land alleged to have been wrongfully certified. The United States had made no other disposition of the lands, and the rights of no others had intervened. It was held that the United States was not entitled in equity either to a cancellation of the patents for such land, nor to recover from the railroad company the minimum government price of $1.25 per acre therefor. U. S. v. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 132.

Vol. VI, p. 436, sec. 3.

In a suit in equity by the United States to cancel a patent to lands, the rule as to what constitutes a bona fide purchaser is no different from what it would be if the complainant were an individual. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 271.

Vol. VI, p. 436, sec. 4.

Bona fide purchasers.—A homestead entry on public land, in the open and undisturbed possession of another, constitutes an unlawful trespass on such possession, and gives the entryman no rights or interest in the land as against a bona fide purchaser from such prior possessor to whom a patent had been duly issued. Dockendorf v. Bassett, (1908) 160 Fed. 543; Lyle v. Patterson, (1908) 160 Fed. 545.

A purchaser of land certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the state of Minnesota in aid of railway construction, and conveyed by that state to a railway company, occupies the position of a purchaser in good faith, protected as such by this section, although the certification was erroneous, and might have been avoided and the land recovered back by the government while in the hands of the railway company, where such purchaser had no notice, actual or constructive, of the claim of the government. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1904) 195 U. S. 524, 25 S. Ct. 113, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 306.

But the protection afforded by this section to bona fide purchasers from any grantee railway company to whom lands have been erroneously certified or patented does not extend to one who purchased, after the date of this Act, certain unearned lands included in the grant made by the Act of May 12, 1864 (13 Stat. L. 72, ch. 84, secs. 1, 2, 3), to the state of Iowa, in aid of railway construction, the title to which the state, before the passage of the Adjustment Act, had first resumed by legislative enactment, upon the railway company's default, and then relinquished to the United States. Knepper v. Sands, (1904) 194 U. S. 476, 24 S. Ct. 744, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1083.

A homestead claimant whose rights attached before any interest in the land was acquired by a railway company under a congressional grant is not concluded by an adjudication against the government in a suit brought by it to cancel certain patents issued to the railway company, including one for the land in question, to which suit he was not made a party, although he may have been an active member of a Settler's Protective Association, which may have made such representations to, and brought such facts to the attention of, the government as to induce the government to bring the suit. Brandon v. Ard, (1908) 211 U. S. 11, 29 S. Ct. 1, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 68.

The legislature of Iowa, having by Act March 16, 1882 (Laws 1882, p. 102, ch. 107), resumed title to all unearned lands of the grant to the Sioux City & St. Paul Railroad Company, made by Act Cong. May 12, 1864, ch. 84, 13 Stat. L. 72, to the state, and by the state to the company by Act April 3, 1866 (Laws Iowa 1866, p. 143, ch. 134), on account of the default of the company, a purchaser of such lands from the company thereafter could acquire no rights, and is not protected as a bona fide purchaser by this section, as against one who entered the lands under the land laws of the United States, to which the lands were subsequently relinquished by the state, nor is he entitled to purchase such lands from the United States under section 5; the bona fide character of his purchase from the railroad company being as essential under one section as the other. Ostrom v. Wood, (1905) 140 Fed. 294.

Certain land in controversy was within the limits of a railroad grant, and, though the railroad company earned the land, it accepted other land in lieu thereof, and then failed to complete the road for which the grant was made, by reason of which the land in controversy reverted to the United States. The railroad knew that it had no title or equitable claim to the land when it contracted to sell the same to plaintiff's assignor in September, 1888, and, when plaintiff took his assignment, he knew that suit was then pending by the United States to quiet its title, and in October, 1899, he made an agreement with the railroad company, reciting the pendency of such suit, and agreeing that if the government was successful, as it subsequently was, he would receive from the railroad company the amount paid on the original agreement, with interest, and release all claims for failure of title. After defendant had taken possession as a homestead entryman in 1890, plaintiff took no steps to regain possession until he sued to recover the land. It was held that the plaintiff was not a purchaser in good faith within this section. Logan v. Davis, (1910) 147 Ia. 441, 124 N. W. 808.

Vol. VI, p. 438, sec. 5.

The preferential right of purchase from the government given by this section to "bona fide purchasers" from a railway company of lands excepted from the operation of its congressional land grant, inures to the benefit of a person seeking to bring settlers on such lands, who was given, by written agreement with the railway company, the right to purchase for himself and others lands within the indemnity limits of its grant when title thereto should be acquired by the company. Gertgens v. O'Connor, (1903) 191 U. S. 237, 24 S. Ct. 94, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 163, affirming (1902) 85 Minn. 481, 89 N. W. 866.

Where land in a section granted to a railroad company, and subsequently excepted from the grant by reason of a prior pre-emption entry which the pre-emptor abandoned prior to the grant, was sold by the railroad company to a bona fide purchaser, it was held that such purchaser had a prior right to purchase the land from the United States under such section, as against an applicant to enter the land as a homestead within four months after the cancellation of the enlistment of the land by the railroad company. Ramsay v. Tacoma Land Co., (1903) 31 Wash. 351, 71 Pac. 1024.

Delay cannot successfully be urged to prevent bona fide purchasers from a railway company of land excepted from its grant from exercising the right to purchase the same from the government, where the application to purchase was made within ten months after the land had been stricken from the company's list, pursuant to a decision of the Land Department, and prior to such decision both the railway company and the Land Department had assumed that the land was already the property of its railway company's grantee by virtue of its purchase from that company. Ramsey v. Tacoma Land Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 360, 25 S. Ct. 286, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 513, reversing (1903) 31 Wash. 351, 71 Pac. 1024.

But the protection afforded to bona fide settlers by this Act does not cover a subsequent settlement of land within the indemnity limits of such grant, made with knowledge that it had been withdrawn from entry, and had been selected to supply deficiencies claimed to exist within the place limits. Gertgens v. O'Connor, (1903) 191 U. S. 237, 24 S. Ct. 94, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 163, affirming (1902) 85 Minn. 481, 89 N. W. 866.

Lands granted by Congress to a state and by the state to a railroad company on condition, and which were afterwards resumed by the state for the failure of the company to comply with such condition and reverted to the United States, are not lands "excepted from the operation of the grant," within the meaning of this section; and a purchaser from the company acquires no right under said section to purchase the lands from the United States. Ostrom v. Wood, (1905) 140 Fed. 294.

A state corporation is a citizen of the United States, within the meaning of this section. Ramsey v. Tacoma Land Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 360, 25 S. Ct. 286, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 513.

Vol. VI, p. 442, sec. 1.

Where a withdrawal of public lands along the route of a railroad, in aid of which a grant of lands has been made by Congress, is made by the chief officers of the Land Department in advance of the definite location of the route of such road, in order that the lands may be preserved for the ultimate satisfaction of the grant, such withdrawal, if not made in opposition to the terms of the grant or other congressional enactment, is a reservation made by competent authority. The reservation, during its continuance, removes the lands embraced therein from the category of public land, and excludes them from subsequent railroad land grants containing no clear declaration of an intention to include them, even though it subsequently transpires that the withdrawal was ill-advised, or that the lands are not required for the satisfaction of the prior grant. Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 614.

Lands granted to Northern Pacific Railroad Company.—No such reservation of lands within that portion of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company under Act July 2, 1864, ch. 217 (13 Stat. L. 365), which was forfeited to the United States by this Act, as to except from the grant made to that company by the joint resolution of May 31, 1870 (16 Stat. L. 378), the lands common to both grants, was effected by the transmission to the Secretary of the Interior in 1865 by the president of the company of a map of the general line of the road, which was not authorized by the company, and which was not accepted by the Land Department, and the filing, two months after the date of such resolution, of two maps of general route, which included the line authorized by the resolution. U. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1904) 193 U. S. 1, 24 S. Ct. 330, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 593.

Reinvests United States with title.—This Act reinvests the United States with the legal title to the unearned lands; and therefore such lands may be reconveyed. Doe v. Pugh, (1903) 137 Ala. 346, 34 So. 377.

This Act does not operate to confirm the title of the companies to lands opposite completed portions of their roads against all contingencies and reserved conditions, whether precedent or subsequent, nor as a waiver of forfeiture for condition broken. U. S. v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 861.

Vol. VI, p. 448, sec. 1.

Rights acquired by settlement and improvement upon unsurveyed land, duly and timely asserted, will, as against an intervening indemnity railroad selection, made under this Act, be protected in their entirety, even though the lands claimed lie in different quarter sections and the improvements of the settler are shown to be confined to a single quarter section. Donohue v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., (1907) 101 Minn. 239, 112 N. W. 413.

Vol. VI, p. 448, sec. 2.

The relinquishment of a homestead entry after the final decision of the Secretary of the Interior in favor of the entryman in a contest with a railway company claiming under a subsequent selection of indemnity lands does not inure to the benefit of the railway company, in view of the provision of this Act. St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Donohue, (1907) 210 U. S. 21, 28 S. Ct. 600, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 941.

Vol. VI, p. 449, sec. 1.

This section is not invalid as creating an indebtedness by a retrospective Act, nor as condemning the companies to pay a debt without a hearing, the debt having been created when a company sold land to which it had no right and which was patented to it through mistake, and a recovery being dependent on proof of such facts in the suit. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 651.

Original grants not changed.—This Act does not purport to alter or repeal the original grants, but is an independent act passed by Congress in the exercise of its constitutional power to protect the property of the United States, and its validity is not dependent on any reservation of the power of repeal in the original granting Acts. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 96.

Suits to annul patent.—This Act, when read with the Act of March 3, 1891, ch. 561, sec. 8, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 526, puts all patents, whether issued in pursuance of railroad grants or otherwise, in the same category, and suits by the government to cancel cannot be maintained except as thereby provided. A suit to annul patents reaches back of the patents; the purpose being to forfeit the entire grants, so far as the lands are held by the railroad company, for failure to observe the condition requiring the company to sell to actual settlers. The patents are only evidentiary of the grant; it is the grant that confers title. If the grant is rendered subject to forfeiture for want of the observance of a condition subsequent, the breach whereof may have occurred later than the issuance of many patents, the forfeiture should not be defeated because suits were not instituted to annul the patents within the time fixed by the statute. Should the grant be annulled, the annulment would carry with it, it is true, the avoidance of the patents. But the conditions of the grant must be read into the patents, so the patents cannot stand in the way of the enforcement of such conditions. U. S. v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 861, 890.

Action to recover price of land.—Irrespective of the Adjustment Acts of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. L. 556, ch. 376), and this Act, the federal government has the right to sue a railroad company to recover the value of lands erroneously patented to such company, and sold by it to persons who dealt with it in good faith. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (1906) 200 U. S. 341, 26 S. Ct. 296, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 507.

A suit by the United States brought under this Act to recover from a railroad company the price of lands erroneously patented to the company under a grant and resumed by the former Act, but which had in the meantime been sold to bona fide purchasers whose titles were protected by such Acts, is within the cognizance of a court of equity, where the sales cover numerous tracts and were made during a series of years, and the bill prays for a discovery and accounting with respect thereto, and, having obtained jurisdiction for such purpose, the court, from the evidence so obtained, may determine the amount due the complainant and render judgment therefor. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 96.

The suit may be brought against the corporation for the recovery of money only, in case the purchaser has been found to be a bona fide purchaser upon a claim made by himself, or on his behalf, to the Secretary of the Interior. Oregon, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 832, 833.

It is no defense to an action to recover such price that some of the lands involved were sold by the company for less than the government price, where it received a larger average price for the lands, taken as a whole. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 662.

Vol. VI, p. 450, sec. 2.

The confirmation of title in the good-faith purchasers is intended to right the wrongs done such purchasers at the cost of the companies responsible therefor to the extent of the government price of the lands surrendered by the United States for that purpose. It does not ratify the wrong done to the United States, but provides relief for the innocent purchaser against its consequences at the cost of the wrongdoer. These companies will not be heard in a court of equity to say: "We did not agree to pay for these lands. We took them and sold them without right. Your remedy is against our innocent grantees to get back what we had no right to convey. You cannot ratify their title without condoning our wrong." U. S. v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 953, 958.

Vol. VI, p. 451, sec. 2.

The mode of determining what is mineral land adopted in U. S. v. Richmond Min. Co., (1889) 40 Fed. 415, wherein the court said: "The defendant, a corporation engaged in mining, reducing ores, and refining bullion, purchased wood and charcoal for use at its reduction works. The cord wood, and the wood from which the charcoal was manufactured, were cut upon unsurveyed public mineral lands, mineral in character, of little or no value except for the mineral therein, and within organized mining districts, or not far remote from known mines. This was mineral land, within the meaning of the Act of Congress of June 3, 1878, permitting timber to be taken therefrom for 'building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes,' and that defendant could lawfully purchase such wood and coal for said use under the license given by said Act," was probably considered and approved by Congress in this Act. U. S. v. Mullan Fuel Co., (1902) 118 Fed. 666.

A ruling by the Secretary of the Interior that the classification of land as mineral, by land commissioners appointed under this Act, does not prevent the Land Department from making such disposition of the lands as would be proper, on a subsequent showing that the land was not in fact mineral, was upheld in Lynch v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 535.

Vol. VI, p. 456, sec. 1.

A court of equity will not undertake to determine in advance of the final action of the Land Department, the respective rights of grantees from the Northern Pacific Railway Company of land claimed to be within the indemnity limits of the land grant of July 2, 1864, and settlers and purchasers from the United States or their grantees, whether holding patents or not, who claim the protection of this Act, by permitting any purchaser or settler claiming in good faith, under any law of the United States or ruling of the Land Department, any land so situated that a right thereto in the railroad grantee or its successor in interest attached by reason of definite location or selection, to elect whether to retain or transfer his claim, and requiring the Secretary of the Interior to furnish the company with a list of the lands so retained, and allowing the company to select other lands in lieu thereof upon executing a proper relinquishment. Humbird v. Avery, (1904) 195 U. S. 480, 25 S. Ct. 123, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 286.

Sales or contracts made by the Northern Pacific Railway Company after its acceptance of this Act, cannot defeat the operation of the provisions of that Act, enacted to settle disputes arising out of conflicting rulings in the Land Department with reference to the eastern terminus of the railroad as affecting the Northern Pacific land grant, by permitting any purchaser or settler claiming, in good faith, under any law of the United States or ruling of the Land Department, any land so situated that a right thereto in the railroad grantee or its successor in interest attached by reason of definite location or selection, to elect whether to retain or transfer his claim, and requiring the Secretary of the Interior to furnish the company with a list of the lands so retained, and allowing the company to select other lands in lieu thereof upon executing a proper relinquishment, although the statute contains a provision that the railroad grantee or its successor in interest shall not be bound to relinquish lands sold or contracted for. Humbird v. Avery, (1904) 195 U. S. 480, 25 S. Ct. 123, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 286.

The relinquishment by the railroad in favor of a settlement made on unsurveyed lands after the passage of the Act is optional with it, and not mandatory, and the settler may not complain of the refusal to relinquish. Cameron v. Lyen, (1910) 57 Wash. 384, 106 Pac. 1111.

Withdrawal. — Under the grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, the Secretary of the Interior has no authority to withdraw or suspend from sale or entry lands within the indemnity limits of grants which had not been previously selected with his approval, to supply deficiencies within the place limits of the grant, and such withdrawals and suspensions are ineffectual. Hoyt v. Weyerhaeuser, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 324.

Vol. VI, p. 461, sec. 1947.

Lands reserved, under this section, in each township for common schools are public lands of the United States not "reserved for public uses," within section 2477, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 498, granting a right of way for the construction of highways over public lands

"not reserved for public uses," and hence a highway which has existed over such lands for over seven years is a public highway under the Washington statute. Peterson v. Baker, (1905) 39 Wash. 275, 81 Pac. 681.

Vol. VI, p. 462, sec. 2275.

Land is within a reservation under this section, where it has been withdrawn by the Secretary of the Interior "pending determination as to the advisability of including the same within a forest reservation." Alberger v. Kingsbury, (1907) 6 Cal. App. 93, 91 Pac. 874.

The title of the state is not a mere passive trust, which the statute of uses would execute, thereby placing the legal title in the inhabitants of the township, but the state is a purchaser for valuable consideration, with full power to sell or lease the school lands for the use of schools, as the legislature might provide and as might be considered most beneficial for the public. Black v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 237 Ill. 500, 86 N. E. 1065.

Vol. VI, p. 473, sec. 10.

The state of Washington on coming into the Union acquired ownership of the shores and bed of all navigable waters up to the line which in the surveys of the public lands of the United States constituted the boundary between land and water; which survey fixed prima facie the limits of the public land which might be disposed of by the United States, and outside of which only could the state claim ownership of the shores and beds of navigable water. Corrigan v. Brown, (1907) 169 Fed. 477.

Eminent domain.—The title in fee to state school lands granted by this section of the enabling act cannot be acquired by eminent domain. State v. District Ct., (1910) 42 Mont. 105, 112 Pac. 706.

Vol. VI, p. 474, sec. 11.

Adverse possession.—A local statute making limitations prescribed by it applicable to actions by the state, etc., the same as to actions between individuals, does not authorize the acquisition of title to school lands by adverse possession, since such construction would make the statute repugnant to this act. O'Brien v. Wilson, (1908) 51 Wash. 52, 97 Pac. 1115.

Vol. VI, p. 476, sec. 17.

This section refers only to the manner of disposing of the lands, and must be construed with reference to the limitations prescribed in section 11, so that a local Act creating a state normal school fund, so far as it appropriates the proceeds of lands sold for the erection of normal schools, instead of the income thereof, is void. State v. Rice, (1906) 33 Mont. 365, 83 Pac. 874; State v. Maynard, (1903) 31 Wash. 132, 71 Pac. 775.

The power to determine or limit the manner of the use of the land granted by this section is purely legislative, and cannot be delegated to a commission. State v. Budge, (1905) 14 N. D. 532, 105 N. W. 724.

The state may appropriate to one institution more than its proportionate part of the land. State v. Callvert, (1904) 34 Wash. 58, 74 Pac. 1018.

University land.—Though section 14 of this Act, supra, grants seventy-two sections of land to the state for a university, the university is not excluded from the benefits of this section. State v. Callvert, (1904) 34 Wash. 58, 74 Pac. 1018.

Vol. VI, p. 478, sec. 4.

The interest or income from the proceeds of the sale of lands can only be used in the support and maintenance of the university, in the payment of the current expenses thereof, and charges for conducting the same. Roach v. Gooding, (1905) 11 Idaho 244, 81 Pac. 642.

This section vests title in the state and contemplates that lieu or indemnity lands may be selected for such lands as had been sold or disposed of at the time of the admission of the state. Balderston v. Brady, (1910) 17 Idaho 567, 107 Pac. 493.

Removal of timber.—Prior to an official survey, the title to land which, when surveyed, would constitute school sections in the several townships, remains in the United States; and hence, prior to such survey, the state cannot grant any authority to remove timber therefrom, nor prevent the United States from recovering the value of timber so removed. U. S. v. Bonners Ferry Lumber Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 187.

Vol. VI, p. 486, sec. 6.

A grant in præsentis is made by this section, and on a selection by the state of land within its terms, which selection is afterward approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the state's title relates back to the date of the grant, or at least to the date of such selection. Brigham City v. Rich, (1908) 34 Utah 130, 97 Pac. 220.

Vol. VI, p. 487, sec. 8.

Only such saline lands as should be selected as a part of the other lands granted, and not specifically located, were granted to the state of Utah by this act. Montello Salt

Co. v. Utah, (1911) 221 U. S. 452, 31 S. Ct. 706, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 810, reversing (1908) 34 Utah 458, 98 Pac. 549.

Vol. VI, p. 483, sec. 10.

Proceeds of sale.—This section is not intended to apply to the proceeds derived from the sale of university lands, which were entirely governed by section 8. State v. Candland, (1909) 36 Utah 406, 104 Pac. 286.

Vol. VI, p. 498, sec. 2477.

The word "highways," as used in this section, should be construed in accordance with recognized local laws, customs, and usages, so that a highway dedicated thereby is not limited to the beaten path or track, but is sixty feet wide, when so provided for the establishment of ordinary highways by the local law. Butte v. Mikosowicz, (1909) 39 Mont. 350, 102 Pac. 593.

Grant in præsentis.—A dedication of public land for highways, under this section, is a grant to the public as a continuing body, so that, so long as the roadway remains a rural one, it is under the supervision of the county as trustee for the public; and as soon as the territory comes within the limits of an incorporated city, is passed to the city as trustee for the same public. Butte v. Mikosowicz, (1909) 39 Mont. 350, 102 Pac. 593.

This section is a present grant, and, if accepted by the legislature or the public in an effectual manner while the land is a part of the public domain, a highway is established. Tholl v. Koles, (1902) 65 Kan. 802, 70 Pac. 881.

Local laws considered.—This section does not operate to grant rights of way and establish highways contrary to the laws of the state or territory in which the lands affected are located. Tucson Consol. Copper Co. v. Reese, (1909) 12 Ariz. 226, 100 Pac. 777.

This section becomes effective in a particular county as of the date of the grant, upon the passage of a local law declaring all section lines in that county public roads; such legislation being, in effect, an acceptance of the grant. Walbridge v. Russell County, (1906) 74 Kan. 341, 86 Pac. 473.

Acceptance—Necessity.—The grant remains in abeyance until a highway is established under some public law authorizing it and takes effect from that time. McAllister v. Okanogan County, (1909) 51 Wash. 647, 100 Pac. 146.

Where, in ejectment by a city to recover possession of land for a street, the evidence was sufficient to establish a highway by prescription if the land over which it passed had been subject to private ownership, it is sufficient to show an acceptance of the dedication of the right to use public land over which the street passed for street purposes, made by this section. Butte v. Mikosowicz, (1909) 39 Mont. 350, 102 Pac. 593.

A resolution of the board of supervisors accepting a right of way for the construction of highways over public lands as far as the grant related to a certain road described, which resolution was recorded in the office of the county recorder, does not make the road described a public highway, where it did not appear that the resolution was made on petition of taxpayers, nor that the road as laid off was recorded. Tucson Consol. Copper Co. v. Reese, (1909) 12 Ariz. 226, 100 Pac. 777.

An order of a board of county commissioners, otherwise regular, undertaking to establish a highway across public land of the United States, operates as an effectual acceptance of the congressional grant of a right of way for the construction of a highway, and one deriving title to such land through a settlement subsequently made takes it subject to the easement so created. Molyneux v. Grimes, (1908) 78 Kan. 330, 98 Pac. 278.

User. — An acceptance of the dedication of land of the general government for public roads may be made either by this section or by the acts of the public authorities, or of the public itself. Van Wanning v. Deeter, (1907) 78 Neb. 282, 110 N. W. 703, affirmed on rehearing 78 Neb. 284, 112 N. W. 902.

This statute is an express dedication of a right of way, and an acceptance of the grant while the land is a part of the public domain may be effected by public user alone, without any action of the public highway authorities, and, when an acceptance thereof has once been made, the highway is legally established, and is thereafter a public easement upon the land, and subsequent entrymen and claimants take subject to such easement. Montgomery v. Somers, (1907) 50 Ore. 259, 90 Pac. 674.

Where the general public had used a highway for seven years over public lands before the same were entered by a homesteader, it was held that such user constituted an acceptance of the grant without any resolution of the board of county commissioners accepting the highways. Okanogan County v. Cheetham, (1905) 37 Wash. 682, 80 Pac. 262.

But the desultory use by private persons of a logging road over public lands is not sufficient to make the road a highway under this section. Rolling v. Emrich, (1904) 122 Wis. 134, 99 N. W. 464.

And see Cross v. State, (1906) 147 Ala.

Vol. VI, p. 501, sec. 1.

Who entitled to benefit of act. — A railroad company having built a road prior to the act may also take advantage of this act. Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Stringham, (Utah 1910) 110 Pac. 868.

A decree rendered on demurrer, dismissing, on the merits, a suit to establish a trust in certain lands in favor of a railway company which set up, as a basis of its alleged title in fee simple, the Railroad Land Grant Act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. L. 365, ch. 217), prevents the successor in interest of such railway company from asserting, in an action of ejectment involving the same property, brought by the defendant in the former suit, that such company had acquired title under this section or under the state statute of limitations. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Slaght, (1907) 205 U. S. 122, 27 S. Ct. 442, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 738.

The grant has the attributes of a fee; that is, perpetuity and exclusive use and possession. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, (1908) 14 Idaho 362, 94 Pac. 56.

This act is a grant in presenti, differing only from an absolute present grant, in that the thing granted is indefinite and the name of the grantee unknown. Oregon Short Line

125, 41 So. 875, wherein it was said that a roadway used by the public over government land does not become a public highway from mere use for twenty years, or by prescription, under this section.

Effect of acceptance. — Where a territorial public highway was established over public lands under this section, the status of the highway became permanently fixed, and it is not changed by the subsequent establishment of a government forest reserve embracing land over which it passed, notwithstanding Act June 4, 1897, ch. 2, 30 Stat. L. 35, 36, which vests the control of highways over forest reservations in the Secretary of the Interior. Duffield v. Ashurst, (1909) 12 Ariz. 380, 100 Pac. 821.

This section operating with a statute of the state declaring section lines in a county containing public lands to be highways constitutes a dedication and acceptance of public land for a highway, so that when it passed into private ownership it was taken subject to the easement. Tholl v. Koles, (1902) 65 Kan. 802, 70 Pac. 881.

An acceptance of a dedication of public land for streets relates back to the date of the dedication. Butte v. Mikosowitz, (1909) 39 Mont. 350, 102 Pac. 593.

Lands subject to right of way grant. — Land of the general government not reserved for public purposes may be used for public roads. Van Wanning v. Deeter, (1907) 78 Neb. 282, 110 N. W. 703, affirmed on rehearing 78 Neb. 284, 112 N. W. 902.

Land reserved by R. S. U. S., sec. 1947. — In each township for common schools are public lands of the United States not "reserved for public uses," within this section. Peterson v. Baker, (1906) 39 Wash. 275, 81 Pac. 681.

R. Co. v. Stalker, (1908) 14 Idaho 362, 94 Pac. 56.

The grant is a base, qualified, or limited fee, and is more than an easement, and a reversionary interest remains in the United States to be conveyed by it to the person to whom the land may be patented, whose rights will be subject to those of the railroad. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, (1908) 14 Idaho 362, 94 Pac. 56.

Compliance with statute — necessity. — The grant of a right of way and station grounds on public lands of the United States to railroad companies becomes operative only when a railroad company specifically indicated as a grantee, by compliance with this section, has definitely located its right of way and station grounds. Comfort v. Great Northern R. Co., (1909) 18 N. D. 570, 120 N. W. 875.

Manner. — The definite location of the right of way and station grounds of a railroad company may be made by acts of the company operating as unmistakable evidence of appropriation, such as the construction of its railroad, station buildings, and other appurtenances, or by filing with the register of the Land Office where the land is located a profile of its route and station grounds, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in compliance with section 4 of this act. Comfort v. Great Northern R. Co., (1909) 18 N. D. 570, 120 N. W. 875.

Actual construction of a railroad definitely locates only a right of way extending 100 feet on each side, and definite location of station grounds outside of such right of way must be made by other and further acts of the railroad company, operating as unmistakable notice to an intending settler of an appropriation by the company for that purpose. Comfort v. Great Northern R. Co., (1909) 18 N. D. 570, 120 N. W. 875.

Effect. — A railroad, on compliance with this act becomes a grantee as specifically and definitely as if it had been named in the act. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, (1908) 14 Idaho 362, 94 Pac. 56.

Where a railroad selects land in the mode prescribed by the Interior Department, and advises the department of such selection by filing its maps, it has done all the law requires of it, and the grant then becomes a fixity, not only as to the grantee, but as to the thing granted. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, (1908) 14 Idaho 362, 94 Pac. 56.

Change of location. — A railroad company which has obtained the approval of a profile of its road by the Interior Department may change a portion of its location, providing such change does not affect intervening rights. Phoenix, etc., R. Co. v. Arizona Eastern R. Co., (1906) 9 Ariz. 434, 84 Pac. 1097.

Lands subject to grant — Lands twenty miles distant from a railroad right of way are not "adjacent" within the meaning of this act. U. S. v. St. Anthony R. Co., (1904) 192 U. S. 524, 24 S. Ct. 333, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 548.

An abandoned mining claim becomes public land to which the right of way of a railroad company attaches, so that the relocation is subject to the easement of the railroad company. Bonner v. Rio Grande Southern R. Co., (1903) 31 Colo. 446, 72 Pac. 1065.

Irrigation lands. — Lands within a reservation withdrawn under the Reclamation Act (Act June 17, 1902, ch. 1093, 32 Stat. L. 388, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 1098) for the furtherance of an irrigation project and resting under valid subsisting homestead filings are no longer "public lands," and are therefore exempt from the operation of this act. U. S. v. Minidoka, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 762; Minidoka, etc., R. Co. v. Weymouth, (1911) 19 Idaho 234, 113 Pac. 455.

Grant subject to prior settlers. — A railroad acquires no title to a right of way appropriated by it as against an actual settler on public lands until it acquires such settler's rights by condemnation, and a patent issued to him prior to condemnation vests in him the full legal title free from any claim on the part of the railroad. Slaght v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1905) 39 Wash. 576, 81 Pac. 1062.

A homestead entry, valid on its face, constitutes such an appropriation and withdrawal of land as to segregate it from public domain, and precludes it from subsequent appropriation for right of way for railroad purposes. Enid, etc., R. Co. v. Kephart, (1907) 19 Okla. 1, 91 Pac. 1049.

This act confers no easement in land occupied by a homestead whose possessory right attached before the railroad was actually constructed, and before its map of definite location had been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, though the company had qualified to take under the act and had determined by a final survey the exact location for its road across the settler's land before the latter acquired any rights. Doughty v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (1906) 15 N. D. 290, 107 N. W. 971.

Where A. made a homestead entry and B. entered thereon and made a settlement, and a railroad appropriated a strip across the tract for its right of way, and its profile maps having been approved by the Secretary of the Interior under Act Cong. March 2, 1899, 30 Stat. L. 990, ch. 374, and thereafter B. by contest secured the relinquishment of A. to be filed in the Land Office, and thereafter made homestead entry for such land under a preference right, and complied with all the provisions of the law, the cancellation of A.'s entry did not cause a reversion of the right of way to the railroad company, under this act. Enid, etc., R. Co. v. Kephart, (1907) 19 Okla. 1, 91 Pac. 1049.

Where a railroad built its line through public land, and, where the land had been filed upon, condemned a way 100 feet wide and filed a map under this act, and at that time there was nothing of record in the United States Land Office showing that the land in controversy was within a Mexican grant, as against one claiming under the grant, which was valid, it was held that the railroad acquired a right of way 100 feet wide, and not merely the land occupied by its roadbed. Ainsa v. New Mexico, etc., R. Co., (1911) 13 Ariz. 320, 114 Pac. 971.

The value of timber unlawfully cut from the public domain by a railroad company at the time when, and the place where, it was cut, is the measure of damages in a suit by the United States to recover its value, where the cutting was done on the advice of counsel, and in the belief that the lands from which it was cut were "adjacent" to the line of the road, within the meaning of this act. U. S. v. St. Anthony R. Co., (1904) 192 U. S. 524, 24 S. Ct. 333, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 548.

Vol. VI, p. 505, sec. 2.

This section has no application to a case where a railroad company does not seek to occupy a roadbed in common with another railroad company, and the situation does not make such occupancy necessary, but seeks to condemn a longitudinal strip of the other company's right of way, on account of its being necessary because of the contracted situation and peculiar topography of the place. North Coast R. Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1908) 48 Wash. 529, 94 Pac. 112.

Vol. VI, p. 506, sec. 4.

Prior to the filing of a right of way map of definite location and the approval thereof, as provided for in this section, the lands covered by the map are free from the right of way, and are subject to mineral location. Southern California R. Co. v. O'Donnell, (1906) 3 Cal. App. 382, 85 Pac. 932.

Complainant had fully complied with section 1 of this act, but the Secretary of the Interior had not given his approval nor acted upon the matter pursuant to the provisions of this section; it was held that, while not so expressly deciding, the rule apparently is that the approval of the Secretary is not necessary in order to pass the fee, or such title or estate as Congress intended to grant. and, in this view, there is a complete remedy by an action for possession, and equity cannot intervene when the remedy is adequate at law. It was also held that, if the statute is not subject to this construction, and the approval of the Secretary is necessary to complete the grant, the court is without jurisdiction to interfere, so long as the matter is pending before the Department, to any greater extent than is necessary to preserve the status quo pending the decision of the matter by that tribunal, the necessity for which in this case is not disclosed by the bill. Wallula Pac. R. Co. v. Portland, etc., R. Co., (1906) 154 Fed. 902.

Filing of profile. — No rights can be initiated before a profile map of the road has been filed in the local Land Office and approved by the Secretary of the Interior — unless actual construction is sooner begun — in view of the provisions of this section. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Doughty, (1908) 208 U. S. 251, 28 S. Ct. 291, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 474, affirming (1906) 15 N. D. 290, 107 N. W. 971.

The proceedings relative thereto are governed by the rules of the Interior Department approved Jan. 13, 1888 (12 L. ed. 423), providing that, if a railroad desires to avail itself of that act as to station buildings, etc., it must file for approval a plat showing the surveyed limits of the ground desired, and that, on the approval of the plat by the Secretary of Interior, the local land officers shall note the same on the plats in their office and note on the certificate of entry of any such lands, in addition to the note concerning the right of way, that the entry is permitted subject to the use and occupation of the railroad for station purposes. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, (1908) 14 Idaho 362, 94 Pac. 56.

The fact that the profile of a surveyed line of a railroad over public lands was sent directly to the Secretary of the Interior, instead of being transmitted to him through the District Land Office, is immaterial as far as establishing the right of the railroad in such right of way. Moran v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1907) 83 Neb. 680, 120 N. W. 192.

Where rival claimants for the same right of way through the public lands filed profiles covering it, it is the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to determine from the facts which company has superior claim to the approval of its profile. Phoenix, etc., R. Co. v. Arizona Eastern R. Co., (1906) 9 Ariz. 434, 84 Pac. 1097.

While a contest is pending before the Secretary of the Interior between rival railroad companies seeking approval of conflicting profiles of their roads through public lands, the court should not assume jurisdiction to determine the ultimate right of possession of the rights of way in controversy. Phoenix, etc., R. Co. v. Arizona Eastern R. Co., (1906) 9 Ariz. 434, 84 Pac. 1097.

The rule that the one most at fault must suffer where two innocent persons are involved has no application to defeat a railroad which has filed a map of the public land it desires for station purposes. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, (1908) 14 Idaho 362, 94 Pac. 56.

On approval by the Secretary of the Interior of the profile of a proposed railroad through public lands in accordance with this section, the title to the right of way vests in the railroad company, and a subsequent patent of land including the right of way, though not made subject thereto, does not divest the title so acquired. Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Stringham, (Utah 1910) 110 Pac. 868.

Any party entering the land over which a survey extends after such approved map was filed in the District Land Office took subject to a right of way for the road extending 100 feet from the center of its track on the side thereof. Moran v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1909) 83 Neb. 680, 120 N. W. 192.

Where a railroad complies with the act and the regulations of the Interior Department, its right cannot be defeated through the neglect of the local Land Office officers to make the notation, etc., required to be made on the plats and books of that office. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, (1908) 14 Idaho 362, 94 Pac. 56.

Legal title to right of way sought by a railroad company vests on the approval of the Secretary of the Interior of the profile of the road, and not prior thereto. Phoenix, etc., R. Co. v. Arizona Eastern R. Co., (1906) 9 Ariz. 434, 84 Pac. 1097.

The approval of the map showing the profile is equivalent to a patent, and vests in the corporation title to the definite right of way shown thereon. Such title, however, dates from the time of such approval, and does not relate back to the date of the filing of the articles of incorporation or to the time of survey, and, as between two companies each seeking to secure the same right of way in whole or in part, the one whose map is first approved obtains the title. Oregon Trunk Line v. Deschutes R. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 738.

The approval of the Secretary of Interior of the plat is an adjudication that the land is necessary for station purposes, and the grant attaches and relates back to the filing of the plat. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, (1908) 14 Idaho 362, 94 Pac. 56.

Where a grant of a right of way had been made to a railroad company by an Act of Congress, and a railway company had filed its map of definite location with the Secretary of the Interior, it had done everything required of it to obtain title to its right of way, and in a suit against a party other than the United States, approval by the President must be presumed. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Watson, (1906) 74 Kan. 494, 87 Pac. 687.

Vol. VI, p. 506, sec. 5.

Requiring bond.—Under this section, taken in connection with the Act of March, 1899, ch. 427, the Secretary of the Interior may grant or refuse to grant a railroad corporation a right of way over forest reservations. If he may do this, he may no doubt impose as a condition of granting the right of way that the railroad corporation shall execute a bond such as is issued on in this case. The bond is not contrary to good morals nor to any law, and therefore cannot be said to have been extorted from the railway company. U. S. v. Bailey, (1910) 178 Fed. 302.

Vol. VI, p. 513. [Right of way over public lands, reservations, and public parks, etc.]

Act Cong. March 3, 1891, ch. 561, secs. 18-21, 26 Stat. L. 1101, 1102, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 508, 510, providing that one may have the right of way through the public lands for the use of a canal or ditch for irrigating purposes, where a map of the same is filed with the Secretary of the Interior for his approval within twelve months after the land has been surveyed by the government, is not inconsistent with this act. U. S. v. Lee, (1910) 15 N. M. 382, 110 Pac. 607.

Vol. VI, p. 514, sec. 2448.

Lands in an Indian reservation are not "public lands," within this section; nor are patents issued to Indian allottees of reservation lands issued pursuant to a law of the United States within such section. Meeker v. Kaelin, (1909) 173 Fed. 216.

Vol. VI, p. 516, sec. 2288.

The right to transfer land for a railroad right of way conferred on a bona fide settler under the pre-emption, homestead, or other settlement law, by this section, applies to homestead land within a reclamation district, and hence the United States, after such transfer, is only entitled to have the railroad so constructed as not to interfere with the irrigation reservoirs, ditches, and canals. U. S. v. Minidoka, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 762.

Where homestead claimants within land withdrawn for a reclamation project, transfer land to a railroad company for a right of way, the fact that the entryman might forfeit or abandon his entry does not constitute such an interest in the land as to entitle the government to an injunction restraining the railroad company from constructing its railroad across the lands and canals embraced in the reclamation project. U. S. v. Minidoka, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 762.

Transfer for church and cemetery purposes.—B. entered a tract of public land under the homestead laws of the United States, and gave to the defendant, pursuant to this section, a contract to convey to it two acres of the tract for church and cemetery purposes. B., by an arrangement with G., relinquished his entry, and G. then entered the tract and received a patent therefor. G., at the time he secured such relinquishment, had notice of the contract, and agreed to carry it out. The defendant thereafter, with his knowledge and consent, entered into the possession of the two acres, and made valuable and permanent improvements thereon. It was held that G. held the legal title to the two acres in trust for the defendant, and that the plaintiff had notice of the defendant's rights when he acquired the tract. Eimer v. Wellsand, (1904) 93 Minn. 444, 101 N. W. 612.

Transfer of water flume.—Where a contract for the transfer by a homesteader, before final proof, of a water flume for power purposes to generate electricity is void and not subject to specific performance, that the original contract was extended and ratified after final proof will not make it enforceable, since the original contract is the basis of the action, and it is on grounds of public policy that courts refuse to specifically enforce such contracts. Cascade Public Service Corp. v. Railsback, (1910) 59 Wash. 376, 109 Pac. 1062.

Power to make rules.—The Land Department of the United States has the power to make reasonable rules and regulations not inconsistent with any valid law, for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of this section. Van Geener v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 46.

Disposition of the public lands of the United States is vested in the officers of the General Land Office, and they may make such reasonable rules relating to the administration of the laws of the United States regulating the disposition of the public lands as they think fit; and the courts have no authority to interfere. Eastern Banking Co. v. Lovejoy, (1908) 81 Neb. 169, 115 N. W. 857.

Congress may authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make rules and regulations for the carrying into effect of the provisions of a law as to the public lands, the enforcement of which devolves on his department. Clyde v. Cummings, (1909) 35 Utah 461, 101 Pac. 106.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior can enforce by appropriate regulations every part of the public land laws as to which it is not otherwise specially provided. Leonard v. Lennox, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 760.

Where the rules, practice, and decisions of the federal Land Department accord with a federal statute as interpreted by a state court, the state court will give the departmental rulings such weight as they are entitled to. Cameron v. Lyen, (1910) 57 Wash. 384, 106 Pac. 1111.

Force of rule.—A rule by the Secretary of the Interior, the import of which is to carry into effect the provisions of an Act relating to the public lands, is valid, and has the same binding force as the law itself. Clyde v. Cummings, (1909) 35 Utah 461, 101 Pac. 106.

Vol. VI, p. 533, sec. 1.

The obvious intention of the statute was to make unlawful any exclusive use and occupancy of any of the public lands without claim or color of title, or asserted right under the land laws, whether by inclosing the same or otherwise. Bircher v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 589.

The word "made," as used in this section, has a more comprehensive meaning than the words "constructed" or "erected." A person "makes" an inclosure so long as he maintains it, and therefore the statute is violated where a person maintains the inclosure of land to which he has no claim, color of title, or asserted right, and consequently an indictment charging such an inclosure is not defective for failure to allege that, at the time the inclosure was constructed, defendant had no claim or color of title to the land made or acquired in good faith, or a right thereto asserted with a view to entry. Bircher v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 589.

What is inclosure.—Where defendant constructed a fence inclosing public lands in violation of this Act, evidence that he took advantage of a lake to make a part of his inclosure, and that, though the fence extended into the lake, cattle could get around the ends thereof at periods of low water, and that there was a gap of three-quarters of a mile across an impassable cañon, was insufficient to establish that the inclosure was not complete. Thomas v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 159, 69 C. C. A. 157.

A settler upon public land in advance of surveys who incloses no greater area than the land laws permit him to enter is not a trespasser, nor is his inclosure unlawful, as this Act was not intended to prevent actual bona fide settlers from occupying and inclosing an entryman's proportion of the public lands. McAllister v. Okanogan County, (1909) 51 Wash. 647, 100 Pac. 146.

Defendant owned a tract of 5,000 acres of grazing land with a mountain range to the east and north of it. He built a fence from the range on the east, westward to the south of his land, and then northwestward to the north range, inclosing between such fence and the mountains his own land and also public lands, which he used for a pasture. There were two breaks in the fence through which, as well as over the mountains, trails led into the pasture, but for practical purposes the fence and mountains prevented defendant's stock from straying out and other stock from coming in. It was held that such fence did not constitute an unlawful inclosure of public lands. U. S. v. Johnston, (1908) 172 Fed. 635.

Where defendant constructed a fence, inclosing public lands in violation of this Act, it is no defense that only a part of the fence forming the inclosure belonged to him, if, by joining his fence to the fence constructed by others, he availed himself of the latter to make a complete inclosure. Thomas v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 159, 69 C. C. A. 157.

By unlawfully inclosing government lands with his own, one acquires no right to the exclusive possession of such government lands; nor can he, by the inclosure, deprive others from peaceably turning cattle thereon. Clemmons v. Gillette, (1905) 33 Mont. 321, 83 Pac. 879; Hardman v. King, (1906) 14 Wyo. 503, 85 Pac. 382. See also Lingle v. Snyder, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 627; Homer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 741; Hanley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 711.

A person inclosing a section of land of the public domain for the purpose of pasturing his stock thereon has no right to recover damages for the pasturing of the land by another and the consequential injury resulting from his being compelled to allow his stock to run at large on the common range; the title to the land being in the federal government, and it alone having a right to sue for an injury to it. Clemmons v. Gillette, (1905) 33 Mont. 321, 83 Pac. 879.

Where cattle were pastured on an inclosed portion of the public domain, in violation of this section, a note given in payment therefor was based on an illegal consideration, and was therefore unenforceable, though purporting to have been for expenses incurred for the service of cowboys in connection therewith. Tandy v. Elmore-Cooper Live Stock Commission Co., (1905) 113 Mo. App. 409, 87 S. W. 614.

Indictment.—Where an indictment charged that defendant unlawfully, etc., maintained and controlled an inclosure of the public lands of the United States situated, etc., and that such inclosure consisted of posts and wire fences, it sufficiently alleged that the lands described were surrounded by posts and wire fences, and was not demurrable for failure to charge that the fences were connected with natural barriers, so as to surround the land, etc. Simpson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 817. See also Krause v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 442, 78 C. C. A. 642.

Evidence.—On the trial of an indictment for inclosing and asserting an exclusive right to public land without claim or color of title, acts, conduct, and statements of defendants tending to show the assertion of a right to exclude the general public or others from the lands described are competent evidence. Krause v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 442, 78 C. C. A. 642.

On the trial of a defendant charged with maintaining an unlawful inclosure of public lands, a deed from a railroad company to defendant for unsurveyed public lands, described by section and subdivision as though surveyed, is inadmissible to show color of title, since it creates no right to any particular land. Carroll v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 425.

Verdict.—On the trial of an indictment for violation of this section, containing three counts, the first charging the unlawful erection and construction of an inclosure of certain public lands, the second the unlawful maintenance and control of such inclosure, and the third the unlawful prevention and obstruction of free passage over said lands by means of fencing and inclosing the same, a verdict of not guilty on the first and third counts is not inconsistent with one of guilty on the second. Carroll v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 425.

Vol. VI, p. 535, sec. 2.

Suit to abate fences.—This section applies to the inclosure and appropriation to private use of such lands by fences built on other lands, and the government may maintain a suit thereunder to abate such fences. Cardwell v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 593, 69 C. C. A. 367.

1909 Supp., p. 541. [Railroad rights of way, etc.]

This Act is effective and complete without any judicial or other or further proceedings on the part of the government, and the questions of fact upon which the forfeiture depends may be inquired into and determined in any judicial proceedings in which rights claimed under the original grants are involved. Columbia Valley R. Co. v. Portland, etc., R. Co., (1908) 48 Wash. 472, 93 Pac. 1067.

officer and his sureties, which shall be levied on his property, and if his goods and chattels shall not be sufficient to satisfy the warrant it may be levied on the person of such officer, who may be committed to prison, cannot be construed to apply only to persons who are officers of the government at the time the warrant is issued, so as to exclude from their operation officers who are found delinquent at the close of their terms of office. *U. The existence of a collector of customs, under R. S. sec. 2550, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 539. for the Georgetown district, which is defined in that section as comprising "all the waters and shores of the Potomac river within the state of Maryland and the District of Columbia, from Pomomkey creek to the head of the navigable waters of that river," precludes the Secretary of the Treasury from appointing, with a right to compensation, a disbursing agent for the funds appropriated for a post office at Washington, under section 3658, which authorizes such appointments only where there is no collector at the place of location of a public work. *Bartlett v. not described by law." U. S. v. Greene, (1906) 146 Fed. 778.

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Vol. VI, p. 595, sec. 1765.

Compensation for the services of an inspector of electric light plants in the Treasury Department, rendered in connection with the installation of an electric light plant for the buildings of the Interior Department, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, and by the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is forbidden by this section, although such services were valuable, and were performed after hours, and in addition to a full discharge of regular duties, since the case is one of the performance of extra services which the law did not specially require, and for which it did not fix the remuneration, and not a case of the filling of two distinct places, offices, or employments. Woodwell v. U. S., (1909) 214 U. S. 82, 29 S. Ct. 577, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 919.

Vol. VI, p. 606, sec. 1782.

Constitutionality. — The powers of the federal government were not exceeded by the enactment of this section, making it a misdemeanor for a United States senator to receive or agree to receive compensation for services rendered before any department, in relation to any proceeding in which the United States is interested. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 344, 26 S. Ct. 688, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057.

Authority of the Senate of the United States over its members is not interfered with by this section. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 344, 26 S. Ct. 688, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057.

Interference with discharge of senatorial duties. — The discharge by a senator of the United States of his legitimate duties is not interfered with by this section, making it a misdemeanor for a United States senator to receive or agree to receive compensation for services rendered before any department, in relation to any proceeding in which the United States is interested. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 344, 26 S. Ct. 688, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057.

Separate offenses. — The agreement to receive, and the receipt of, the forbidden compensation, are made two separate and distinct offenses by this section, making it a misdemeanor for a United States senator to receive or agree to receive compensation for services rendered before any department, in relation to any proceeding in which the United States is interested. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 344, 26 S. Ct. 689, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057.

Venue of crime. — The physical absence of an accused from the state of Missouri when the acceptance by a St. Louis corporation of his offer to render services in consideration of the compensation forbidden by this section was despatched by mail or telegram, was held not to deprive the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri of jurisdiction of the offense, on the theory that the crime was not committed in that district, within the meaning of U. S.

Const., art. 3, sec. 2, and Sixth Amendment, requiring the trial of all crimes against the United States to be held in the state and district where such crimes shall have been committed. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 344, 26 S. Ct. 688, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057.

Sufficient indictment. — An indictment charged an offense under this section, where it averred that the accused, being a senator, received compensation for services rendered before the Post Office Department for the purpose of indicating a decision favorable to his client in a fraud order inquiry pending before that department. Burton v. U. S., (1905) 196 U. S. 295, 25 S. Ct. 243, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 482, reversing (1904) 131 Fed. 552.

Where an indictment alleged that the defendant, being then and there a clerk in the employ of the government in the United States Land Office at D., during his continuance in office, did wrongfully and unlawfully agree to receive compensation for services rendered to a public land entryman, etc., it was held to sufficiently allege that accused was an official or clerk of the government. U. S. v. Long, (1911) 184 Fed. 184.

Where an indictment against a clerk of a government Land Office for unlawfully agreeing to receive compensation for services rendered to an entryman alleged that the services were rendered in relation to a proceeding and claim in which the United States was a party and interested, before the United States Land Office, to obtain title to certain government land from the government, it sufficiently appeared that the land concerning which the alleged agreement was had was the property of the United States. U. S. v. Long, (1911) 184 Fed. 184.

Joinder of offenses. — Charges against the same defendant for conspiracy to defraud the United States, based on R. S. sec. 5440, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 247, and for receiving money from their alleged coconspirator for aiding to procure a contract from the government, and for services rendered in relation to the same, based on section 1781, 1

Fed. Stat. Annot. 712, and this section, defendants being clerks in a department, and such charges all relating to the same transaction, may properly be joined in different counts in the same indictment under R. S. sec. 1024, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 337. McGregor v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 134 Fed. 187.

Disqualification for holding office.—Senators of the United States do not hold their places "under the government of the United States," within the meaning of the declaration in this section, that any one convicted under its provisions shall be incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under that government. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 344, 26 S. Ct. 689, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057.

A fraud order inquiry pending before the Post Office Department is a proceeding in which the United States, although having no direct money or pecuniary interest in the result, is "directly or indirectly interested" within the meaning of this section. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 344, 26 S. Ct. 689, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057.

Death of defendant after judgment.—A judgment entered against a defendant convicted under this section, which provides that any person violating the same shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned and fined, is wholly penal, and the death of a defendant after judgment and while the case is pending in an appellate court on writ of error operates to abate the entire cause of action, and the fine is not collectible from the defendant's estate. U. S. v. Dunne, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 254.

Former jeopardy.—An acquittal upon the charge of having received the compensation forbidden by this section from a specific person, described in the indictment as an officer and employee of a corporation, will not sustain a plea in bar of a prosecution upon the charge of having received such compensation from the corporation, where the accused declined to plead further after his demurrer to the answer, alleging that the two offenses are not, in legal effect, identical, was overruled. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 344, 26 S. Ct. 689, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057.

Receiver of Land Office.—This section applies to a receiver of a Land Office in respect to matters before his own office or which may come before it for his action thereon either judicial, executive, or merely clerical, and without regard to the question whether the service rendered or to be rendered is proper or improper, and a receiver commits an offense under said section by receiving compensation for giving advance information to the person paying the same of the restoration of lands to the public domain through the action of the Land Department, which lands thereby become subject to entry by means of scrip or otherwise in his district. U. S. v. Booth, (1906) 148 Fed. 112.

Clerk in Land Office.—Since an application to purchase lands from the government under the Timber and Stone Act (Act June 3, 1878, ch. 151, 20 Stat. L. 89, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 300) is in effect the inauguration of a proceeding through which land is acquired from the government in which the government is an interested party, it has been held that such act covered an agreement by a clerk in the employ of the government in a local Land Office to receive compensation for services rendered in informing an entryman when certain land belonging to the United States would be open for entry under such act, and in assisting him to obtain title thereto from the United States under such act. U. S. v. Long, (1911) 184 Fed. 184.

A clerk in one of the departments is subject to indictment under this section as an "officer and clerk of the United States." McGregor v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 134 Fed. 189.

Evidence of payment.—An averment in an indictment, charging a United States senator with having received certain checks at St. Louis, Missouri, as compensation for services rendered before the Post Office Department, in violation of this section, and alleging the payment to him of the money thereon at that place, was not supported by evidence that the checks, drawn on a St. Louis trust company, were received by him in the city of Washington, and were by him there indorsed and deposited with a local bank, and were afterwards paid at St. Louis, and that the amount of each check was, immediately upon deposit, credited by the Washington bank to the account of defendant, who had the right to draw against the account without waiting for payment at St. Louis. Burton v. U. S., (1905) 196 U. S. 295, 25 S. Ct. 243, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 482, reversing (1904) 131 Fed. 552.

Vol. VI, p. 610, sec. 5481.

A special agent of the General Land Office, whether appointed by the Secretary of the Interior or by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, is not an officer of the United States within the meaning of R. S. sec. 5481, providing for the punishment of "every officer of the United States who is guilty of extortion under color of his office," and is not subject to indictment and prosecution under said section. U. S. v. Schlierholz, (1904) 133 Fed. 333; U. S. v. Schlierholz, (1905) 137 Fed. 616.

Vol. VI, p. 611, sec. 5498.

Minister to foreign country.—Under this section a person who has entered into a contract with another to assist him in prosecuting the claims of a city against the government, but who shortly afterwards accepts the post of minister to a foreign country, and holds such post during the prosecution of the claim, cannot recover any fee for the prosecution of the claim. He can, however, upon payment of the claims, recover from his associate any attorney fees and costs advanced for his benefit, though he cannot recover any fee for services. Fox v. Willis, (1903) 114 Ky. 940, 72 S. W. 330, 73 S. W. 743.

Vol. VI, p. 614. [Suits against public officers, etc.]

The successor in office of a judge of a territorial court may be substituted in the place of his predecessor on appeal from a final judgment denying mandamus to compel the latter to take jurisdiction of an action attempted to be brought in his court, since the case may properly be considered one in which there is a necessity for such action in order to obtain a settlement of the question involved, within the meaning of this act, authorizing substitution in actions brought by or against federal public officers in their official capacity, or in relation to the discharge of their official duties. Caledonian Coal Co. v. Baker, (1905) 196 U. S. 432, 25 S. Ct. 375, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 540.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Vol. VI, p. 644, sec. 4.

Contracts for purchase of paper for postal cards. — The Public Printer cannot lawfully enter into a contract for the purchase of all the paper required in the printing of postal cards for a period of four years. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 584.

Vol. VI, p. 658, sec. 89.

Special reports of department chiefs. — This section authorizes the printing of 2,500 copies of special as well as annual reports of department bureau chiefs, when such printing is directed by the head of a department. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 377.

1909 Supp., p. 572. [Public printing and binding, etc.]

The phrase "document or reports," as used in this resolution, prescribing the appropriation or allotment out of which the cost of printing and binding of documents or reports emanating from the executive departments, bureaus, and independent offices of the government shall be paid, is restricted to "executive documents and reports," and does not embrace the printed laws authorized by section 56 of the Act of Jan. 12, 1895, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 159. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 514.

The Official Register of the United States, being a public document emanating from the Census Office, all expense incurred in its actual preparation for printing, apart from the creation of the manuscript, is chargeable under this joint resolution to the appropriation or allotment of appropriation for printing and binding for the Census Office; and the balance of the cost thereof, which include the cost of binding and any charge which may be incurred in the creation of the manuscript, should be charged to the Congressional allotment and the appropriate executive allotment in proportion to the number of copies delivered to Congress and to each department. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 552.

1909 Supp., p. 574, sec. 2, par. 7.

Statutes, resolutions, or treaties. — The language of this paragraph prescribing the appropriation or allotment out of which the cost of printing any document or report thereafter printed by order of Congress shall be paid, when read in connection with section 56 of the Act of Jan. 12, 1895, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 158, does not refer to statutes, resolutions, or treaties. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 514.

PUBLIC PROPERTY, BUILDINGS, AND GROUNDS.

Vol. VI, p. 700, sec. 1. [Condemnation for building sites, etc.]

Authorization of officer necessary.—This act providing for proceedings for the condemnation of land for public use by the United States confers no general authority to acquire land, but only authority to institute proceedings for condemnation where its acquirement is otherwise authorized. U. S. v. Certain Lands in Narragansett, (1906) 145 Fed. 654.

Nature of proceeding.—A proceeding by the United States for the condemnation of land for public use, and for the assessment and payment of damages therefor, is not a proceeding to collect an account or claim against the United States, but an adversary proceeding instituted by the United States against landowners for the taking thereof. U. S. v. Sargent, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 81.

Vol. VI, p. 705, sec. 2.

Interest.—This act authorizes condemnation of land for public use by the United States, and declares that the practice, pleadings, forms, and modes of proceeding shall conform to the practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings existing in courts of record in like cases in the state. Rev. Laws Minn. 1905, sec. 2534, declares that on payment of damages, with costs and interest, if any, in condemnation proceedings, the petitioner may take possession, etc., and section 2535 declares that all such damages, whether assessed by commissioners or on appeal, shall bear interest from the time of filing the commissioners' report. It was held that an order in proceedings in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, confirming a report of commissioners in condemnation proceedings by the United States, properly awarded interest on the damages assessed for the land taken from the date of the commissioners' report. U. S. v. Sargent, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 81.

Vol. VI, p. 711, sec. 3748.

Title to military clothing.—Under this section prohibiting the purchase, sale, pledge, loan or gift by a soldier of any of his clothing, arms, military outfit, and accouterments, the government in supplying the soldier or recruit with equipments suitable and necessary for the discharge of his military duties retains title to the same; it being regarded as public property, whether remaining in a public depot or in the possession of the individual soldier, and this notwithstanding the soldier is allowed to retain such articles of clothing as he has then in use on the expiration of his term of service. U. S. v. Hart, 146 Fed. 202; Lobosco v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 183 Fed. 742.

This section as amended and enlarged is now contained in section 35 of the Penal Code, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 414.

Other related sections.—See also under R. S. secs. 1242 and 5438, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 1017, and 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 31.

Vol. VI, p. 714, sec. 3753.

Nature of stipulation.—A stipulation executed by the United States district attorney on behalf of the government, conformably to R. S. secs. 3753, 3754, with a view to obtaining possession of vessels building for the United States, which were in the hands of a receiver appointed in proceedings under a state supply lien law, was held not to deprive the United States of any right which it had to assert claims to priority under the building contracts or rights existing by reason of the sovereignty of the United States, since the evident purpose of these sections is that neither the United States nor the claimants to the property shall lose any rights because of the release under the stipulation, but the rights of the parties shall continue to be such as they were before the change of possession. U. S. v. Ansonia Brass, etc., Co., (1910) 218 U. S. 452, 31 S. Ct. 49, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1107.

Interest on claims.—Under this and the following section a stipulation declaring that its object was to secure to all the claimants the fullest possible protection and security did not entitle the claimants to receive interest upon the proceeds of the property in the hands of the United States. William R. Trigg Co. v. Bucyrus Co., (1905) 104 Va. 79, 51 S. E. 174.

RAILROADS.

Vol. VI, p. 728, sec. 9, note.

Rights against pre-emption claimants. — The Union Pacific Railroad Company, Eastern Division, had a right to extend its road west of the 100th meridian via Denver to a connection with the main line of the Union Pacific Railroad under this section, and a right of way 400 feet in width through the public lands for the road as so extended was given the company by that provision. It has been held that this right of way was effective as against a complainant, who initiated a pre-emption claim to certain land on June 16, 1866, by settling thereon from the date of the grant, July 2, 1864; the land being then a part of the public domain. Stuart v. Union Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 753.

Vol. VI, p. 733, sec. 5258.

Attachment of railway cars. — Cars owned by a foreign railway company, which have temporarily come into the state in the course of interstate transportation, through the agency of other carriers, are subject to attachment under the state laws, despite the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act and of this section, securing continuity of transportation. Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 157, 30 S. Ct. 463, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 708. See also Southern Flour, etc., Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1906) 127 Ga. 626, 56 S. E. 742; De Rochemont v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (1909) 75 N. H. 158, 71 Atl. 868.

Garnishment of freight of nonresident carrier. — Sums due to a foreign railway carrier from other carriers as the former's share of freight on interstate shipments may be garnished under the state laws, despite the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act and of this section, securing continuity of transportation. Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 157, 30 S. Ct. 463, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 708.

Vol. VI, p. 752, sec. 1. [Act of March 2, 1893.]

Constitutional. — The Federal Safety Appliance Act governing railways is constitutional. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 80.

Construction. — The Safety Appliance Act is remedial in its character, enacted for the better protection of railroad employees and travelers by rail, and it should be construed by the courts, as far as its terms will admit, so as to carry out fully the intention of Congress. U. S. v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 893; U. S. v. Southern R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 1014; U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 173 Fed. 684; Southern R. Co. v. Snyder, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 492.

The doctrine that statutes in derogation of the common law are to be construed strictly does not demand that the act compelling interstate carriers to adopt automatic couplers, in which there is an undoubted intention to make some change in the existing law, should be so construed as to defeat the obvious object of Congress. Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 196 U. S. 1, 25 S. Ct. 158, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 363, (1902) 117 Fed. 462, 54 C. C. A. 508. Compare U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 182, in which it was held that this Act is a criminal statute creating public offenses, and is to be construed in accordance with the rules governing the construction of such statutes, and that trials thereunder are governed by the rules of criminal procedure and evidence.

The undoubted purpose of Congress in enacting the safety appliance laws was humanitarian, and such statute should not be frittered away by judicial construction. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 496; Wabash R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 1, 93 C. C. A. 393.

Intent. — The purposes of the Safety Appliance Acts fall within the rule applicable to statutes to prevent fraud upon the revenue and for the collection of customs, where intent does inhere in their violation. U. S. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1906) 150 Fed. 220.

Duty absolute. — A carrier using, in moving interstate traffic, cars whose condition does not satisfy the requirements of the Safety Appliance Acts cannot escape the penalty therein prescribed by showing that it exercised reasonable care in equipping its cars with the required safety appliances, and used due diligence to keep them in repair by the usual inspection, but the statutes impose an absolute duty upon the carrier which is not discharged by the exercise of reasonable care or diligence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 559, 31 S. Ct. 612, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 582, affirming (1909) 170 Fed.

556, 95 C. C. A. 642; Delk v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 580, 31 S. Ct. 617, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 590, reversing (1908) 158 Fed. 931, 14 Ann. Cas. 233, 86 C. C. A. 95; U. S. v. Southern R. Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 122; U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 180; U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 696; U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1909) 81 Kan. 101, 105 Pac. 221, overruling first paragraph of the syllabus of Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Brinkmeier, (1908) 77 Kan. 14, 93 Pac. 621.

In St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, (1908) 210 U. S. 281, 28 S. Ct. 616, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1061, the leading case on this question, which arose under section 5 of this Act, Mr. Justice Moody, in the course of the opinion, said: "We need not enter into the wilderness of cases upon the common-law duty of the employer to use reasonable care to furnish his employee reasonably safe tools, machinery, and appliances, or consider when and how far that duty may be performed by delegating it to suitable persons for whose default the employer is not responsible. In the case before us the liability of the defendant does not grow out of the common-law duty of master to servant. The Congress, not satisfied with the common-law duty and its resulting liability, has prescribed and defined the duty by statute. We have nothing to do but to ascertain and declare the meaning of a few simple words in which the duty is described. It is enacted that 'no cars, either loaded or unloaded, shall be used in interstate traffic which do not comply with the standard.' There is no escape from the meaning of these words. Explanation cannot clarify them, and ought not to be employed to confuse them or lessen their significance. The obvious purpose of the legislature was to supplant the qualified duty of the common law with an absolute duty, deemed by it more just. If the railroad does, in point of fact, use cars which do not comply with the standard, it violates the plain prohibitions of the law, and there arises from that violation the liability to make compensation to one who is injured by it. It is urged that this is a harsh construction. To this we reply that, if it be the true construction, its harshness is no concern of the courts. They have no responsibility for the justice or wisdom of legislation, and no duty except to enforce the law as it is written, unless it is clearly beyond the constitutional power of the lawmaking body. It is said that the liability under the statute, as thus construed, imposes so great a hardship upon the railroads that it ought not to be supposed that Congress intended it. Certainly the statute ought not to be given an absurd or utterly unreasonable interpretation, leading to hardship and injustice, if any other interpretation is reasonably possible. But this argument is a dangerous one, and never should be heeded where the hardship would be occasional and exceptional. It would be better, it was once said by Lord Eldon, to look hardship in the face rather than break down the rules of law. But when applied to the case at bar the argument of hardship is plausible only when the attention is directed to the material interest of the employer to the exclusion of the interests of the employee and of the public. Where an injury happens through the absence of a safe drawbar there must be hardship. Such an injury must be an irreparable misfortune to someone. If it must be borne entirely by him who suffers it, that is a hardship to him. If its burden is transferred, as far as it is capable of transfer, to the employer, it is a hardship to him. It is quite conceivable that Congress, contemplating the inevitable hardship of such injuries, and hoping to diminish the economic loss to the community resulting from them, should deem it wise to impose their burdens upon those who could measurably control their causes, instead of upon those who are, in the main, helpless in that regard. Such a policy would be intelligible, and, to say the least, not so unreasonable as to require us to doubt that it was intended, and to seek some unnatural interpretation of common words."

Intrastate railroads.—A railroad company which hauls over its line within a state a car of another company employed in moving interstate traffic consigned to a point in another state, which car is not equipped with the appliances required by Safety Appliance Act, is liable for the penalty imposed by said Act. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 353.

"Equipped."—This Act while in terms it requires only that engines and cars shall be "equipped" with the required appliances, must be construed to mean equipment which, if there, is capable of being operated, and that it shall be kept in good order and repair; but it cannot be construed to require that the equipment shall in fact be efficiently operated by those in charge of the train. U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 182.

A train, within the Safety Appliance Act, is one aggregation of cars drawn by the same engine, but if the engine is changed then there is a different train. U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 148.

Stockyards company conducting part of transportation by railroad for carriers.—A stockyards company which owns and maintains at a large shipping point an extensive stockyard which is in effect the live stock depot of all the railroad companies doing business at that point, and which owns and maintains several miles of railroad tracks extending over its own premises from its stockyards to a transfer track (also on its own premises) connecting with the several tracks of the railroad companies, and which by means of its own locomotives and servants transports for hire over its tracks all shipments of live stock accepted by the railroad companies for carriage to and from such stockyards, including such shipments as are interstate, is a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce by railroad within the meaning of the safety appliance law, although the cars in which it transports such shipments are in every instance the cars of the railroad company from which the shipment is received or to which it is delivered at the transfer track, and although the stockyards company does not collect the compensation for its service directly from the shippers or consignees, but only from the railroad companies delivering the loaded cars to it, or receiving them from it, and the transfer track, and although its service is performed and its compensation is paid in accordance with a contract between it and the railroad companies. Union Stockyards Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 404.

Terminal company.—A terminal company which received cars of coal coming from another state, and delivered them within its yards to the engines of a railroad company, was engaged in moving interstate commerce, within this Act. U. S. v. Northern Pac. Terminal Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 861.

In Belt R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 543, it appeared that the defendant owned a railroad located wholly in Cook county, Ill. Its road constituted a belt which intersected the trunk lines leading into Chicago and forming, by means of V's, direct physical connection with such trunk lines. The defendant's business consisted entirely of transporting cars between industries located along its line and trunk lines and between such trunk lines, for which it received an arbitrary charge per car, which was collected monthly from the railroad companies, defendant having no dealings with shippers. The defendant paid no attention to the class of traffic, but acted as an agent of the trunk lines in transferring cars. The defendant on the occasion in question moved a train of freight cars, containing one consigned from a point in Illinois and destined to Wisconsin, from the tracks of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad to those of the Chicago & Northwestern railroad. It was held that such transfer constituted in effect a continuous carriage over both such roads, so that the defendant with respect thereto was engaged in interstate commerce, and was within the Safety Appliance Acts in relation to power brakes.

Modification by court.—Even admitting that the requirements of the Safety Appliance Act are unduly severe and unreasonable, that fact would not justify a modification of the statute by judicial decision. The courts do not possess the power to read an exception into a statute so as to modify or change the nature of the same and thus defeat the purpose for which the law was intended. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 175, 94 C. C. A. 35.

Negligence per se.—The fact that an automatic coupler would not couple automatically with one of its kind, and therefore did not comply with the Safety Appliance Act, did not render the use of such a coupler negligence per se, in the absence of proof that it was not reasonably safe for the uses to which it was put. Shohoney v. Quincey, etc., R. Co., (1909) 223 Mo. 649, 122 S. W. 1025.

Defect discovered by proper inspection.—A railroad company negligently fails to furnish an automatic coupler for the safety of its servants in coupling and uncoupling cars, as required by Act, where the coupler furnished is broken so that it will not work, and the defect was discoverable by proper inspection, and the company did not use ordinary and reasonable care by proper inspection to discover the defect, or to repair it after discovery. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. York, (1909) 92 Ark. 554, 123 S. W. 376.

For other notes. see under this title, vol. 10, p. 375, sec. 1 et seq.

Vol. VI, p. 753, sec. 2.

What cars included.—If a railroad company hauls a car which is defective as to coupling appliances or grabirons or handholds, although the defective car does not contain any interstate traffic, yet if it is hauled in a train which contains another car that is loaded with interstate traffic, then the statute is violated. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 456.

Intrastate transportation.—A car loaded with coal, to be delivered to a consignee in another state, is "used in moving interstate traffic," within the meaning of section 2, by the railroad company which takes it from the place of loading, although such company only undertakes to deliver it to a connecting carrier within the same state. U. S. v. Southern R. Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 122.

Cars on side track.—A freight car loaded with interstate freight, and placed on a side track in the railway yard at destination, to await simple repairs to the automatic coupler, is used in moving interstate commerce within the meaning of the Safety Appliance Act, when a coupling with another car is thereafter attempted by the carrier's order, during the course of switching operations. Delk v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 580, 31 S. Ct. 617, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 590, reversing (1908) 158 Fed. 931, 14 Ann. Cas. 233, 86 C. C. A. 95.

A foreign freight car, moved by one railroad company from one state into another, loaded, and there delivered to the defendant company, and by the defendant to the consignee, and after being unloaded placed by the defendant on a switch track, from which it was afterwards redelivered to the original company, again loaded by it, and returned into the state whence it came, was, when on defendant's switch track awaiting redelivery, a car in use in interstate commerce, and subject to the requirement of the Safety Appliance Act, as to equipment with automatic coupling devices in such condition as to be operative, and its movement on such track by defendant, when so defective that it would not couple by impact, was a violation of such Act. Johnson v. Great Northern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 643.

Coupling and uncoupling included.—To the same effect as the original note, Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 196 U. S. 1, 25 S. Ct. 158, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 363, reversing (1902) 117 Fed. 462, 54 C. C. A. 508; U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 486; U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 185, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 1021; Southern R. Co. v. Simmons, (1906) 105 Va. 651, 55 S. E. 459.

—Of similar effect to the original note, U. S. v. Southern R. Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 122; U. S. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1906) 150 Fed. 229; U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 696; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 623.

Duty to keep in repair.—Where an interstate carrier has equipped its cars, engines, etc., engaged in interstate commerce with automatic couplers, so that they can be coupled and uncoupled without men going between the ends of the cars, the carrier is then only required to use the utmost diligence in discovering and correcting defects in such equipment which may thereafter develop in the use thereof, and is not liable for violation of the Act because of the mere transportation of a car containing a defective coupler, under the maxim that the law does not require an impossibility. U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 542, 95 C. C. A. 628.

Car becoming defective in transit.—A railroad company is not guilty of a violation of the provisions of Safety Appliance Act by using on its line in moving interstate traffic an engine or car not equipped as therein required, if it was properly so equipped at the beginning of its interstate journey, but became defective during such journey, unless such company failed to supply the deficiency at the first opportunity after it was actually discovered, or should have been discovered by the use of the utmost care that a highly prudent man would use under the circumstances of the case. U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 182; U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 542, 95 C. C. A. 628.

Carriers are required immediately to repair defects in cars caused during the time they are being hauled, if they can do so with the means and appliances at hand at the time and place, or when such condition should have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable care. If requisite means are not at hand, carriers have the right without incurring the penalty of the law, to haul the defective car to the nearest repair point on their line. But, if they haul such car from a repair point, they are liable for the statutory penalty. U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 696.

Duty to maintain repair points.—It is the duty of the carrier to establish reasonable repair points along its line for the making of repairs of the kind necessary to comply with the law. At such repair points there should be the material and facilities to make all such repairs. U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 696.

Appliance out of repair.—A common carrier cannot excuse itself from compliance with the statutory requirements by showing that a particular equipment is out of repair; for to permit it to do so would enable it to require brakemen to enter between cars for the purpose of coupling and uncoupling them, thereby defeating the purpose of the law altogether. Employees can only be protected from danger by the safety appliances being kept in repair. U. S. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1906) 150 Fed. 229.

Movement of car for repair.—The necessary movement of a defective car alone for the purpose of repair does not subject the carrier to the penalties of the Act. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 236, 93 C. C. A. 450; U. S. v. Rio Grande Western R. Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 399, 98 C. C. A. 293.

While a railroad may move empty cars by themselves to repair shops for the purpose of having them placed in condition to comply with the Safety Appliance Acts without being guilty of a violation of those Acts, yet in so moving them for the purpose of repair, in order not to be subject to the Acts, they must be wholly excluded from commercial use themselves, and from connection with other vehicles which are commercially employed. Southern R. Co. v. Snyder, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 492. See also U. S. v. Southern Pac. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 407.

But where an interstate carrier hauls cars considerably damaged by derailment, so that the coupling devices are gone, 379 miles, past three or more places where repairing is done, in order to make the repairs at larger and better equipped shops, it violates the safety appliance law. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 486.

Where a car having a broken coupler could reasonably have been repaired where it stood on a switch track, the mere fact that it could be repaired more conveniently at another place was held not to justify its being moved in its defective condition. Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King, (1909) 169 Fed. 372, 94 C. C. A. 652.

Moving car for unloading preparatory to sending to repair shop.—In U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 194, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 306, a car of defendant railroad company was found in its yards in Louisville loaded with pig iron which had been shipped from another state and with the chain forming a part of the coupler on one end broken, rendering the device inoperative. The defect was discovered by defendant, but could not be repaired where the car was without blocking the entire business of the yards, and the place of business of the consignee of the iron was only four blocks distant and nearer than the repair track, and defendant therefore took the car to the consignee, where it was unloaded and from there to the repair track, where it was repaired. It did not appear what company had brought the car to the yards. It was held that defendant took the most practicable course after discovering the defect and was not guilty of a violation of Safety Appliance Act.

Empty cars.—An empty car hauled in a train with others cars carrying interstate commerce must be equipped with appliances required by law, and such appliances kept in repair to the same extent as those of a loaded car. U. S. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1906) 154 Fed. 516; U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 185, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 1021; U. S. v. Wheeling, etc., R. Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 198; U. S. v. Southern R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 1014. Compare U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 182.

A car with a defective coupler which, although empty, was brought into a station in an interstate train, left in the switch yards over night, and the next day taken out in another interstate train, was being used in interstate commerce within the meaning of the Safety Appliance Act, not only while being moved in the trains, but also while in the yards. Erie R. Co. v. Russell, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 722.

A car which had been actually engaged in moving interstate traffic, and which was held in the railroad yards to be sent on an interstate trip whenever required, and had not been segregated from the class of cars used in such traffic, was, though unloaded, being so used when a servant was injured, within the meaning of this Act. Felt v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1910) 48 Colo. 249, 110 Pac. 215.

Train being made up.—This Act applies not only in cases where the cars are, at the very moment of the injury, being actually used in moving interstate traffic, but to cases where the injury occurs in the making up of the train for the purpose of moving interstate traffic. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Bromberg, (1904) 141 Ala. 258, 37 So. 395.

Necessity for getting in dangerous position to prepare coupler or to uncouple.—If the coupling and uncoupling apparatus on a car is so constructed that in order to open the knuckle when preparing the coupler for use, or in uncoupling the car, it is reasonably necessary for a man to place part of his body, his arm, or his leg in a hazardous or dangerous position, such car is not equipped as required by this section. U. S. v. Nevada County Narrow Gauge R. Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 695.

"Hauling" a defective car is not necessary to complete the offense against this Act, as both "hauling" and "using" are forbidden, and it seems that such a car may be "used," within the statutory meaning, otherwise than by being "hailed." U. S. v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 28, 106 C. C. A. 230.

Locomotives are embraced by the words "any car" in this section, prohibiting common carriers from using any car in moving interstate commerce not equipped with automatic couplers, although locomotives are elsewhere in the statute in terms required to be equipped with power driving wheel brakes. Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 196 U. S. 1, 25 S. Ct. 158, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 363, reversing (1902) 117 Fed. 462, 54 C. C. A. 508.

A dining car in constant use is, while waiting for the train to be made up for its next interstate trip, "used in moving interstate traffic" within the meaning of this section. Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 196 U. S. 1, 25 S. Ct. 158, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 363, reversing (1902) 117 Fed. 462, 54 C. C. A. 508.

The mere fact that a railroad has frequently hauled interstate traffic is not sufficient in a personal injury action to hold the road amenable to the federal Safety Appliance Act, requiring cars employed in interstate traffic to be equipped with automatic couplers. Felt v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1910) 48 Colo. 249, 110 Pac. 213.

Uncoupling levers.—The use by a railroad company of a switch engine having no "uncoupling levers" does not subject it to the penalty imposed by this Act for using a car "not equipped with couplers coupling automatically by impact and which can be uncoupled without the necessity of men going between the ends of the cars," in the absence of proof that such levers are necessary to enable such engine to couple to cars by impact, and especially where it is shown that it can be uncoupled without the necessity of going between it and the car to which it is coupled. U. S. v. Montpelier, etc., R. Co., (1910) 175 Fed. 874.

Both ends of cars.—The Safety Appliance Act requires that each car taken separately shall be completely equipped, and that the couplers at both ends shall be in good order and in operative condition. U. S. v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 893; U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 696; U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 696; U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 456.

Car loaded in manner to prevent use of coupling lever.—A car duly equipped with automatic coupling and uncoupling apparatus, but which apparatus is rendered wholly inoperative because the car is loaded with lumber projecting over the coupling lever, so as to prevent its operation in the movement of interstate traffic, cannot be held to be a car equipped in compliance with the Safety Appliance Act. U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 801.

Each coupler operative by own mechanism.—The federal Safety Appliance Act requires that each coupler must be operative of its own mechanism, irrespective of the condition of the appliances on other adjacent cars. U. S. v. Southern R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 1014.

Delegation of duty by company.—The duty of seeing that no cars used in interstate commerce are hauled by a railroad company unless equipped with the required safety appliances is imposed by the statute on the company, and cannot be evaded by delegating the same to the conductor of a train or other employee whose action in that respect is that of the company. Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King, (1909) 169 Fed. 372, 94 C. C. A. 652.

Bad-order card on car.—A railroad company which moved, in the carriage of interstate commerce, a car the automatic coupler on which was so out of repair that it would not work, is not relieved from liability for violation of this Act by the fact that it placed a bad-order card on such car, indicating the defect. U. S. v. Southern R. Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 122; U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 173 Fed. 684.

The word "used," in this Act requiring common carriers to equip any car used in moving interstate traffic with automatic couplers, applies to all cars and trains operated by a railroad carrier of interstate commerce over an interstate highway, irrespective of whether they are operated between points situated in the same state, or whether they are empty, or whether the traffic carried is interstate traffic. Wabash R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 1, 93 C. C. A. 393.

Duty to keep car equipped.—The duty imposed on interstate carriers by Act prohibiting any such carrier to haul or permit to be hauled or used on its line in interstate traffic any car not equipped with automatic couplers, requires the carrier, not only once to equip a car used in interstate traffic with such coupler, but to keep it so equipped. U. S. v. Erie R. Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 352.

Couplers of different makes.—The equipment of a locomotive and a dining car with automatic couplers, but of such different type as not to couple with each other automatically, does not satisfy the provision of this section prohibiting common carriers from using any car in moving interstate commerce not equipped with couplers coupling automatically by impact, and which can be uncoupled without the necessity of men going between the ends of the cars. Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 196 U. S. 1, 25 S. Ct. 158, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 363, reversing (1902) 117 Fed. 462, 54 C. C. A. 508.

A shovel car is a "car" within the meaning of this Act. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 407, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 681.

Duty absolute.—See under this title, vol. 6, p. 752, sec. 1.

Vol. VI, p. 755, sec. 4.

Passenger cars.—The requirement of this section, as amended by Act March 2, 1903, ch. 976, sec. 1, 32 Stat. L. 943, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 375, that it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to use "any car in interstate commerce that is not provided with secure grabirons or handholds in the ends and sides of each car, for greater security to men in coupling and uncoupling cars," applies to passenger cars, and a failure to comply therewith is not excused by the fact that cars are equipped with air hose, steam hose, or other appliances affording some measure of protection to employees. U. S. v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 99. See also Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 623.

Car being moved from one railroad yard to another.—A car employed in moving interstate traffic and not equipped with a grabiron required by this section was received from another company by the defendant railroad company and hauled from one of its yards to another for the purpose of being put in a train and forwarded to its destination in another state. It was held that in such movement the car was being used in interstate commerce within the meaning of this Act, and that the defendant was liable for the penalty imposed thereby for its violation. U. S. v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., (1905) 143 Fed. 360.

Handholds on rear of yard engine.—While this section is indefinite as to the number of handholds and as to the intended location thereof on the ends and sides of cars, it is not indefinite so far as it requires handholds to be provided both in the ends and sides of cars, and a yard engine used in interstate commerce is not equipped as required where no handholds are provided in the sides near the rear end of the tender though the tender is equipped with a running board and an uncoupling lever bar which runs nearly across the entire back of the tender, and is so located and of such a character that it might serve as a handhold; it not appearing that the presence of a handhold as required would not tend to greater security. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 94. Compare U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 148.

Burden of proof.—Unless the government satisfies a jury by a preponderance of the evidence that there was no grabiron or handhold on the car where there should have been one, the jury should find for the railroad company. U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 148.

Coupling and uncoupling cars.—A man in connecting or disconnecting the air hose between the cars is engaged in coupling or uncoupling cars within the meaning of this section, if it is necessary for him to connect or disconnect that hose in order to connect or disconnect the cars. U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 148.

Duty absolute.—See under this title, vol. 6, p. 752, sec. 1.

Vol. VI, p. 755, sec. 5.

Delegation of legislative power.—Legislative power is not unconstitutionally delegated to the American Railway Association and the Interstate Commerce Commission by the provisions of this section that, after a date named, only cars with drawbars of uniform height shall be used in interstate commerce, and that the standard shall be fixed by the association and declared by the commission. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, (1908) 210 U. S. 281, 28 S. Ct. 616, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1061.

Drawbars of uniform height.—Drawbars of unloaded freight cars are required, by this section, to be of uniform and standard height; but those of loaded cars need not be of uniform height, provided that they do not vary more than the three inches prescribed as the maximum permitted variation from the standard. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, (1908) 210 U. S. 281, 28 S. Ct. 616, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1061.

Necessary showing by plaintiff.—Failure of the plaintiff to show that the centre of the draft line of the drawheads of the two cars was not even was immaterial, the rule not requiring that the draft lines should be even, but that the centres of the drawbars should be of a certain standard height. It was not necessary for plaintiff to show knowledge on the part of defendant that it had not complied with the rule. Neal v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1903) 71 Ark. 445, 78 S. W. 220.

Vol. VI, p. 756, sec. 6.

Separate offenses.—The unit of the offense under either section 2 or 4 is the hauling or use of a defective car, and each such car so hauled or used, whether at different times or at the same time and in the same train, constitutes a separate offense, which may be charged in different counts of the same petition under section 6. U. S. v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 28, 106 C. C. A. 230.

Number of penalties recoverable.—Where several cars each without the requisite appliances required by Safety Appliance Act are hauled by a carrier in interstate commerce at one and the same time, there are as many distinct violations of the Act as there are cars hauled not properly equipped, for every one of which the statutory penalty is recoverable. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 183 Fed. 770; U. S. v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 28, 106 C. C. A. 230.

Nature of action.—An action by the United States to recover from a carrier the penalty prescribed for violations of the Safety Appliance Acts is a civil, and not a criminal, action. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 559, 31 S. Ct. 612, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 582, affirming (1909) 170 Fed. 556, 95 C. C. A. 642; U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 185, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 1021; U. S. v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 775; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 175, 94 C. C. A. 35; U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 456; U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 542, 95 C. C. A. 628; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 557; U. S. v. Southern R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 1014; U. S. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 284; U. S. v. St.

Liability for death of servants.—Failure of the railroad to comply with the rule of this section does not authorize a recovery for the death of a servant unless such failure was the proximate cause of the death. Neal v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1903) 71 Ark. 445, 78 S. W. 220.

Question for jury.—In an action for a death alleged to have been caused by failure to comply with the rules adopted under this Act it was held to be a question for the jury whether the railroad companies had failed to comply with the rules. Neal v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1903) 71 Ark. 445, 78 S. W. 220.

Separate violations.—Where a car is not properly provided with grabirons on a given day, and the train stops for a certain time and then goes on again, there are not two violations of the law, but only one, because the car is all the time being moved in the same train. It makes no difference that it is being so moved on two different days. U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 148.

Louis Southwestern R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 28, 106 C. C. A. 230.

Complaint.—A complaint under the Federal Safety Appliance Act alleging that the violation occurred "on or about" a particular date, is not vague and indefinite. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 175, 94 C. C. A. 35.

In an action against a railway company for penalties for violating the Safety Appliance Acts, the government need not allege that the company acted knowingly and negligently; it being sufficient that the dereliction is set forth in the language of the statute, with specification of the time and place, the particular part of the car where the defects existed, and the nature of the defect. U. S. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., (1908) 180 Fed. 483.

A complaint under the safety appliance law of Congress to recover a penalty for hauling a car in moving interstate traffic in violation of this Act, as amended by Act March 2, 1903, ch. 976, 32 Stat. L. 943, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 375, relating to automatic couplers, is not demurrable (a) because it fails to negative the matter of the exception created by the proviso to section 6, or (b) because it only shows that one of the couplers was out of repair and inoperative, and that it was so because the uncoupling chain was "kinked;" or (c) because it fails to negative the exercise of reasonable care on the part of the railway company in maintaining the coupler in operative condition; or (d) because, although showing an actual and substantial hauling of the car in moving interstate traffic, it fails to specify how far the hauling was continued, or is silent in respect of any actual use of the defective coupler. U. S. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1908) 163 Fed.

519, 90 C. C. A. 329. See also Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 280.

Evidence—Competency.—Evidence of the condition of alleged defective cars when last inspected, thirty-seven miles distant, before they arrived at the station where the defects were discovered, and the material slips of the workmen who repaired them, were held to be competent evidence upon the issues in an action to recover penalties under this Act. U. S. v. Rio Grande Western R. Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 399, 98 C. C. A. 293.

Evidence.—In an action by the United States against a railroad company to recover penalties for violation of the Safety Appliance Acts, a record kept by a station agent of the defendant in his office in the regular course of his duty showing the contents of a car loaded at his station, and its origin and destination, was held to be admissible on behalf of the government to prove that the car was being used in interstate commerce, as an admission of fact by defendant. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 166 Fed. 280.

Weight and sufficiency.—Positive testimony is to be preferred to negative testimony, other things being equal; but where it was the duty of an inspector on the part of the railroad company to inspect cars, and he said that he did inspect the cars that came in and did not see certain defective appliances, that is not such negative testimony that it should not receive the same consideration, other things being equal between the witnesses, as positive testimony. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 456. See also Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 623.

Measure of proof.—In an action by the government against an interstate railroad to recover penalties for violation of the Safety Appliance Acts, the government is only required to prove its case by preponderance of the evidence and not beyond reasonable doubt. U. S. v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 893; U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 696; U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 185, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 1021; U. S. v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 775; U. S. v. Nevada County Narrow Gauge R. Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 695; U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 456; U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 542, 95 C. C. A. 628; U. S. v. Southern R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 1014; U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 173 Fed. 684; U. S. v. Montpelier, etc., R. Co., (1910) 175 Fed. 874; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 183 Fed. 770. Contra, U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 182.

Burden of proof.—The burden of proof is cast upon the government. Every material fact must be proved by a fair balance of evidence to entitle the plaintiff to recover the penalty prescribed by law. U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 696; U. S. v. Montpelier, etc., R. Co., (1910) 175 Fed. 874.

Where, in an action against an interstate railroad for violating this Act, the government proves that a car laden for interstate traffic and with defective couplings has been hauled on defendant's tracks, the burden is then shifted to defendant to prove exculpatory facts. U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 542, 95 C. C. A. 628.

The burden of proof is upon a carrier to bring itself within the exception in favor of four-wheeled cars which is made by the proviso in this section. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 407, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 681; U. S. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 918, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 175.

Directed verdict.—An action by the government against a railroad company to recover penalties for violations of the Safety Appliance Act, is a civil action, so that, the government having produced evidence to sustain each of the counts in its declaration, and the defendant having introduced no testimony, the government is entitled to a directed verdict. U. S. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 284. Contra, Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 194.

Review.—An action by the United States against a railroad company to recover the penalty for violation of the Safety Appliance Act is a civil action, and the judgment therein is reviewable at the instance of the United States on writ of error. U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1909) 167 Fed. 306, 93 C. C. A. 58; U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 542, 95 C. C. A. 628.

Former jeopardy.—The constitutional prohibition against subjecting a person to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense does not apply to actions by the United States against an interstate railroad to recover penalties for violation of this Act, so as to prevent a review by the government of an adverse decision on a writ of error. U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 542, 95 C. C. A. 628.

Joint action to recover penalty.—In a joint action against two or more railroad companies to recover the penalty for violation of this Act, there may be a recovery against all or any of the defendants as the proofs warrant. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 353.

The only exceptions to the safety appliance acts are those found in the proviso of section 6. U. S. v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 893.

Vol. VI, p. 756, sec. 8.

Judicial notice of Act.—In an action against a railroad company for the death of a servant caused by defendant's failure to comply with this Act, the court will take judicial notice of what the Act provides, and its introduction in evidence is immaterial.

Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Bromberg, (1904) 141 Ala. 258, 37 So. 395.

Prima facie case by plaintiff.—In an action against a railroad company for the death of a brakeman alleged to have been caused by defendant's failure to equip its cars with automatic couplers, as required by this Act, proof that plaintiff's intestate was engaged in coupling cars at the time he was killed, that the cars were not provided with automatic couplers, and that the intestate's death was caused by the old-fashioned couplers slipping by one another, made a prima facie case. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Bromberg, (1904) 141 Ala. 258, 37 So. 395.

Negligence of fellow servants.—Where a switchman who was, while employed in Arizona, injured in switching cars not equipped with sufficient automatic couplers as required by the federal Safety Appliance Act, which provides that any employee injured by any car in use contrary to the provisions of the Act shall not be deemed to have assumed the risk, the injuries, though caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, were from a risk which, as a matter of law, he did not assume, though the common-law doctrine of fellow servants, grafted on the principle of assumed risk, obtains in Arizona, except as modified by R. S. Ariz. 1901, par. 2767, making an employer liable for injuries to an employee in consequence of the incompetency of another employee, provided the employer had previous notice of such incompetency. Southern Pac. Co. v. Allen, (1907) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 106 S. W. 441.

Effect of Act on common law.—This Act abolishes the defense of assumed risk and any other defense based on identically the same facts which would establish the defense, if available. Southern Pac. Co. v. Allen, (1907) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 106 S. W. 441.

Jurisdiction of state courts.—In Southern Pac. Co. v. Allen, (1907) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 106 S. W. 441, it was held that the courts of Texas have jurisdiction of an action for injuries to a switchman received in Arizona through the failure of a foreign railroad company to furnish proper automatic couplers, whether based on negligence or on a violation of the federal Safety Appliance Act, the laws of Texas and Arizona concurring in holding that such a negligent act is subject to legal redress, and the federal statute being in force throughout the United States.

Removal to federal court.—Where, after pleas of assumed risk and contributory negligence in an action for injuries to a brakeman while uncoupling cars, plaintiff amended his petition so as to allege a violation of the federal Safety Appliance Act, prohibiting interstate carriers from using cars not equipped with automatic couplers, and providing that a servant injured while using cars not equipped should not be held to have assumed the risk, the cause thereupon became one arising under the laws of the United States, and was removable to the federal court, though the petition, before the amendment, stated a cause of action independent of such

Employees entitled to benefit of Act.—The protection given to railroad employees by the Safety Appliance Act is not limited to employees injured while coupling or uncoupling cars, but extends to a switchman who was injured as a direct result of the movement of a train containing a car with a broken coupler while, acting within the scope of his duty, he was between the cars engaged in replacing the broken part, and he cannot be charged with contributory negligence because of his so going between the cars with knowledge of the defect. Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King, (1909) 169 Fed. 372, 94 C. C. A. 652.

A plea of assumption of risk in an action against a carrier for injuries to an employee resulting from a failure to comply with this Act is frivolous. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Bromberg, (1904) 141 Ala. 258, 37 So. 395.

Necessary showing by plaintiff.—It is unnecessary for the complaint in an action for the death of a servant, caused by failure to comply with this Act, to allege in what manner the failure to comply with the Act caused the injury. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Bromberg, (1904) 141 Ala. 258, 37 So. 395.

In an action by an employee against a railroad company to recover for an injury alleged to have been caused by the use by defendant in interstate commerce of cars not equipped with automatic couplers, as required by this Act, evidence of the use of such cars with couplers so defective that they could not be coupled without going between them, and that in doing so plaintiff was injured, was sufficient to make a prima facie case, although it did not show the precise nature of the defect. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Hazelrigg, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 828.

Question for jury.—In Erie R. Co. v. Russell, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 722, it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate, who was a switchman employed by the defendant railroad company in its yards, while engaged in repairing a defective coupler on a car standing on a switchtrack, was caught between such car and others which moved against it, and killed. It was held, in an action to recover for his death, that the question whether the defective coupler was a proximate cause of his injury, so as to bring the case within the Safety Appliance Act, was properly submitted to the jury, as was also the question of the contributory negligence of deceased under the evidence.

In Donegan v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 869, it appeared that the plaintiff was a brakeman on a freight train of defendant's railroad being moved in interstate business, and was directed to cut off the two rear cars while the train was moving slowly and before it reached a certain switch. The automatic coupler on one of the cars was broken, and plaintiff went between the cars and attempted to pull the pin by hand, but, not succeeding, started out, when his foot caught in an unblocked switch frog and he was injured. It was held, in an action to recover for the injury, that the question whether the failure of defendant to have the car properly equipped was the proximate cause of the injury, so as to render it liable therefor under the Safety Appliance Act was, under the evidence, one of fact for the jury, and that it was error for the court to direct a verdict for defendant.

Contributory negligence.—Of similar effect to the original note. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Gordon, (1910) 177 Fed. 152, 100 C. C. A. 572.

The benefit of the provisions of this section, excluding the defense of assumption of risk, was not refused by holding that, as a matter of law, an experienced railway brakeman who persisted in attempting to couple in a dangerous way a car having an automatic coupler to another car not so equipped when a safer method was called to his attention, and who was killed because he raised his head while making the coupling, in spite of repeated cautions, was guilty of contributory negligence, defeating any recovery. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 590, 31 S. Ct. 561, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 596.

The possibility that a railway employee, while attempting to make a coupling with a car not equipped with an automatic coupler, as required by this Act, might miscalculate the height to which he might safely raise his head, is so inevitable and clearly attached to the risk which, under section 8, he does not assume, as to prevent a court from holding, as a matter of law, that he is guilty of contributory negligence which would defeat any recovery in lifting his head a little too high after being warned of the danger. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 407, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 681.

Vol. VI, p. 757, sec. 1.

State laws.—This Act does not show an intention of Congress to enter the field of legislation relating to the number of employees to be carried on trains operated within a state though engaged in interstate com-

The mere fact that a plaintiff, while employed as a brakeman by defendant railroad company, was injured in coupling cars with a link and pin coupling, used by defendant in violation of this Act, creates no presumption that he was negligent, and unless his contributory negligence is conclusively shown by the evidence it is a question for the jury. Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Arrighi, (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 67.

In an action by a brakeman against a railroad company to recover for an injury received while uncoupling cars used on interstate commerce, one of which was being moved with a defective coupler in violation of this Act, it was error for the court to give a general instruction as to the effect of contributory negligence where the cars could have been uncoupled from the other side of the train without the necessity of going between them as plaintiff did. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Hazelrigg, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 551.

Whether a switchman injured while uncoupling cars equipped with defective automatic couplers in violation of the federal Safety Appliance Act, was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to use safer means, and in violation of his employer's rules, was held, under the evidence for the jury. Southern Pac. Co. v. Allen, (1907) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 106 S. W. 441.

Availability of defense of contributory negligence.—Contributory negligence on the part of an employee is a defense to an action founded on this Act, although by section 8 the defense of assumption of risk is expressly excluded. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 590, 31 S. Ct. 561, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 596.

merce, and hence did not prevent the passage of a state Act regulating such crews. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. State, (1909) 172 Ind. 147, 87 N. E. 1034.

Vol. X, p. 375, sec. 1.

Constitutionality.—Congress had the power, under the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, to require, as it did in the Safety Appliance Act of March 2, 1893, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 752, as amended by this Act, that all locomotives, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railway engaged in interstate commerce, shall be equipped with certain designated safety appliances, regardless of whether such vehicles are used in moving intrastate or interstate traffic. Southern R. Co. v. U. S., (1911) 222 U. S. 20, 32 S. Ct. 2, affirming (1908) 164 Fed. 347; U. S. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 918, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 175; Wabash R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 1, 93 C. C. A. 393; Southern R. Co. v. Snyder, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 492.

Construction.—The provision of this Act amendatory of the Safety Appliance Acts of March 2, 1893, ch. 196, 27 Stat. L. 532, and April 1, 1896, ch. 87, 29 Stat. L. 85, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 752, that the requirements of such Acts relating to train brakes, automatic couplers, etc., shall be held to apply to all trains, locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used in interstate commerce, "and all other locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used in connection therewith," does not require that the connection between a car not equipped as therein required and one used in interstate commerce shall be immediate to bring it within the statute, but it is sufficient if they are in the same train. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 280.

Purpose of amendment.—Two of the purposes for which the Safety Appliance Act of 1893, Act March 2, 1893, ch. 196, 27 Stat. L. 531, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 752, was amended by the act of 1902, were: (1) To include certain vehicles omitted by the former statute; and (2) to include cars "used" by an interstate carrier on any part of its line. The original statute was broadened, and not restricted, by substitution of the word "use" for the words "haul and use." U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 486.

Cars used in moving intrastate traffic on a railway which is a highway of interstate commerce are comprehended by the provisions of the Safety Appliance Act of March 2, 1893, 27 Stat. L. 531, ch. 196, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 752, as amended by this Act, declaring, inter alia, that its provisions and requirements shall "apply to all trains, locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce, and in the territories and the District of Columbia, and to all other locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles, used in connection therewith." Southern R. Co. v. U. S., (1911) 222 U. S. 20, 32 S. Ct. 2, affirming (1908) 164 Fed. 347; U. S. v. Great Northern R. Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 438; U. S. v. Erie R. Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 352; Wabash R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 1, 93 C. C. A. 393; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 623.

The following cases must be considered as overruled on this point by the U. S. Supreme Court case cited supra, this note: U. S. v. Erie R. Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 352; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 280; Southern R. Co. v. Snyder, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 492.

Car being hauled between two points in same state.—Under this amended Act a carrier of interstate commerce over an interstate railway is liable for penalty as to all cars and trains operated on such railway, though the defective car is being hauled from one point to another in the same state, provided that it is part of a train engaged in interstate traffic. U. S. v. International, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 638.

Independent intrastate railroad company.—A common carrier which operates a railroad entirely within a single state, and transports thereon articles of commerce shipped in continuous passages from places without the state to stations on its road, or from stations on its road to points without the state, is subject to the provision of the Safety Appliance Act, although it carries the property free from a common control, management or arrangement with another carrier for continuous carriage or shipments of the articles. U. S. v. Colorado, etc., R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 321, 13 Ann. Cas. 893, 85 C. C. A. 27; U. S. v. Colorado, etc., R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 342, 85 C. C. A. 48; Pacific Coast R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 448.

Cars on side track ready for repair shop.—Where a yard employee was injured in coupling cars on a transfer track, from one of which the drawhead was gone, the fact that such car had been left to be taken to a repair shop, and was not then in commercial use, nor actually connected with any car in such use, and could have been taken from the track without such connection, was not conclusive that it was not subject to the Safety Appliance Acts, if it would naturally be so connected in the usual course of switching. Southern R. Co. v. Snyder, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 492. Compare Siegel v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 873.

Empty cars going to repair shop.—The hauling by a railroad company from one state to another of a car not equipped with the required safety appliances, upon its own trucks, as a part of a train of other cars moving in interstate commerce, is a use of the defective car in violation of the Safety Appliance Act, as amended, though it is empty and is being transported to a repair shop in the state of its destination. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 165 Fed. 423, 91 C. C. A. 373; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 236, 93 C. C. A. 450. See also under this title, vol. 6, p. 753, sec. 2.

Relation to Interstate Commerce Act.—The construction of the language of the Safety Appliance Acts is not controlled by the language or by the interpretation of the terms of the Interstate Commerce Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 808). U. S. v. Colorado, etc., R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 321, 13 Ann. Cas. 893, 85 C. C. A. 27; Pacific Coast R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 448. Compare U. S. v. Geddes, (1903) 180 Fed. 480.

Cars becoming defective while in transit.—If a railroad train used in moving interstate traffic when started is properly equipped with air brakes, as required by Safety Appliance Act, or if cars so used are properly equipped with automatic couplers as therein required when started or when received by the company for transportation over its line, but from any cause either train or cars become defective so as not to comply with the law while being so moved, the company is required to immediately repair such defects as soon as discovered, or as soon as they could have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable care, if the means of repair are at hand; but, if not, the company may haul the same to the nearest repair point without being subject to the penalty for violation of the Act. U. S. v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 775.

Construction train.—A carrier operating its own construction train, which hauls its own rails and products from a point in one state to a point in another state, is engaged in interstate commerce. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 486.

What cars included.—This amended Act requiring railroads to use automatic couplers on interstate equipment, requires all cars regularly used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce and all other cars used in connection therewith to couple automatically by impact, and to be coupled and uncoupled without the necessity of men going between them, whether they be loaded or empty, and though they be not actually engaged in such commerce at the time. Hohenleitner v. Southern Pac. Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 796.

If an interstate carrier receives and hauls a defectively equipped foreign car, which it cannot be required to do, it violates the federal Safety Appliance Acts. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 486.

Under this amended Act it is unlawful for a railroad company to use any car in interstate commerce, or car or similar vehicle used in connection therewith, that is not provided with secure grabirons or handholds at the ends and sides of such car for safety of men in coupling and uncoupling. U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1908) 166 Fed. 997.

Test of interstate commerce.—The importation into one state from another is the test of interstate commerce. Every part of every transportation of articles of commerce in a continuous passage from a commencement in one state to a prescribed destination in another is a transaction of interstate commerce. Every carrier who transports such goods through any part of such continuous passage is engaged in interstate commerce, whether the goods are carried upon through bills of lading or are rebilled by the several carriers. U. S. v. Colorado, etc., R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 321, 13 Ann. Cas. 893, 85 C. C. A. 27.

Used in connection therewith.—This amended Act requires cars used in interstate commerce or cars used in "connection" therewith to be equipped with secure grabirons at the ends and sides of each car for the greater safety of men in coupling and uncoupling. It has been held that a car used in intrastate commerce only, not so equipped, though moved in a train containing a car bearing interstate traffic was not used in "connection" therewith where they were in different parts of the train and not in position to be coupled or uncoupled. U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1908) 166 Fed. 997.

Reasons for failure to couple immaterial.—The Act is violated when cars are hauled or used by carriers engaged in such commerce which will not so couple, whether the failure to do so results from the character of the car, the kind of equipment used, or the fact that the tracks are so laid on a curve that the couplers will not meet without men going between the cars to adjust them. Hohenleitner v. Southern Pac. Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 796.

Termination of journey.—Where a freight car loaded with lumber brought from another state was delivered to defendant railroad company on an exchange track a few blocks from its final destination and after being moved from such track by defendant without inspection was found to have a broken coupler so that it could not be coupled without going between the cars, it was being used by defendant in interstate commerce in violation of this Act. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 165 Fed. 423, 91 C. C. A. 373.

A declaration against a railroad company for violating this Act as amended, alleging that on a specified date defendant hauled a certain car with a defective coupler, so that it could not be coupled by impact, "in and around Atlanta, in the state of Georgia," was not demurrable as showing that the interstate shipment had already reached its destination, under the rule that whenever a car is loaded in one state with a commodity which is destined for another state, and begins to move, interstate commerce is begun, and does not cease until the car has arrived at its point of final destination. U. S. v. Western, etc., R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 336.

—A car with a defective coupler, billed for the repair shop, but which was not sent there, but was left on a track in ordinary use in a switch yard, to be repaired by the switchman and then coupled to other cars, was being "used" within the meaning of the statute. Erie R. Co. v. Russell, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 722.

"In connection therewith."—Where a car not properly equipped is moved in a train containing cars carrying interstate commerce, there is a violation of the Act, notwithstanding the defective car is not immediately connected with that carrying the interstate shipment. U. S. v. Western, etc., R. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 336.

Transportation of articles for independent express company.—The transportation by a common carrier by railroad of articles of interstate commerce for an independent express company is "engaging in interstate commerce by railroad" within the meaning of the Safety Appliance Acts. U. S. v. Colorado, etc., R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 342, 85 C. C. A. 48.

Separate penalty for each car.—U. S. v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 775.

Nature of action.—See under this title, vol. 6, p. 756, sec. 6.

Empty cars.—See under this title, vol. 6, p. 753, sec. 2.

Vol. X, p. 375, sec. 2.

"Single train."—A freight train scheduled to run regularly between points in different states is a single train throughout such run and at all times subject to the provisions of the Safety Appliance Act, although some of the cars composing it may have been left and others taken on at different stations, and although after entering the second state the engine, caboose, and train crew may have been changed. In such case, if at any one or more points in the run a sufficient number of the cars composing the train are not equipped with air brakes to meet the requirement of the Act, the railroad company is liable to the penalty imposed for its violation, but to one penalty only. U. S. v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 776.

Use of hand brakes.—The provision of the Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, ch. 196, sec. 1, 27 Stat. L. 531, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot.

752, requiring all railroad trains used in interstate traffic to have a sufficient number of cars equipped with power or train brakes so that the engineer can control their speed without requiring brakemen to use the hand brake for that purpose, as amended by this section, fixing fifty per cent. of the cars in each train as the minimum number which must be so equipped, which number was increased to seventy-five per cent, by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, cannot be construed to prohibit the use of hand brakes, and evidence that under a general order of a railroad company brakemen were required to set hand brakes on trains while going down a certain grade, as a precaution against accidents, is not sufficient to establish a violation of the statute, there being no claim or evidence that the required percentage of cars were not equipped with power brakes. U. S.

v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 114, affirmed (1911) 185 Fed. 486, 107 C. C. A. 586.

Cars with power brakes not in use.—This section, providing that at least fifty per cent. of the cars in every train shall have their brakes used and operated by the engineer, and that "all power braked cars in such train which are associated together, with said fifty per centum, shall have their brakes so used and operated," is not violated where the required percentage of cars in a train are equipped with power brakes which are used because the train also contains other cars so equipped, but the brakes of which are out of repair and cannot be operated, and are therefore cut out. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 114, affirmed (1911) 185 Fed. 486, 107 C. C. A. 586.

1909 Supp., p. 582, sec. 2.

Constitutionality.—Congress, in the exercise of its power over commerce, could enact the provisions of this Act restricting the hours of labor of railway employees who are connected with the movement of trains in interstate or foreign commerce. Such restrictions are not unconstitutional because many of such employees are, by virtue of practical necessity, also employed in intrastate transportation. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1911) 221 U. S. 612, 31 S. Ct. 621, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 878.

Uncertainty.—The words "except in case of emergency," in the proviso in this section, making it unlawful for railway carriers engaged in transportation in the District of Columbia or the territories, or in interstate or foreign commerce, to require or permit employees engaged in such transportation to be or remain on duty for a longer period than that prescribed, do not make the application of the Act so uncertain as to destroy its validity, even though the proviso in section 3, limiting the effect of the entire Act, can be said to include everything which may be embraced within the term "emergency." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1911) 221 U. S. 612, 31 S. Ct. 621, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 878.

Nine hours not consecutive.—Requiring a railway telegraph operator to work five and one-half hours, and then, after an interval, three and one-half more hours in the same twenty-four, is not made unlawful by the provisions of sections 2, 3, of this Act, forbidding common carriers to permit such employees to be on duty for a longer period than nine hours in any twenty-four-hour period in a place continuously operated night and day. U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 37, 31 S. Ct. 362, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 361.

Excuses for violation.—This Act prohibiting any interstate carrier from permitting its employees to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, is not violated where a crew is permitted to remain on duty more than sixteen hours because of casualty, unavoidable accident, or act of God, or where the delay in the operation of the train was the result of a cause not known to the carrier when the employees left a terminal, and which could not have been foreseen; but the Act does not excuse a carrier failing to operate its train a specified distance within the sixteen-hour period because of its negligence. Black v. Charleston, etc., R. Co., (1910) 87 S. C. 241, 69 S. E. 230.

State laws.—This Act was only intended to prescribe a general rule applicable to conditions throughout the country in the movement of interstate commerce, and hence did not so cover the subject as to preclude the state from passing a law making it unlawful for any corporation or receiver operating a railroad in the state to permit any telegraph or telephone operator spacing trains by telegraph or telephone under the block system to remain on duty for more than eight hours in a twenty-four-hour period. People v. Erie R. Co., (1910) 198 N. Y. 369, 91 N. E. 849. Compare the cases set out in 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot., p. 583.

The fact that Congress, on March 4, 1907, adopted this statute regulating the hours of labor of trainmen, to become operative on March 4, 1908, does not impair state legislation, unless the federal Act is in operation, and is prohibitive in its terms, or affects the very question which the state legislation undertakes to control. Lloyd v. North Carolina R. Co., (1909) 151 N. C. 536, 66 S. E. 604.

Intrastate railroads and employees wholly engaged in local business were not affected by the provisions of this section, making it "unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this Act, to require or permit any employee subject to this Act to be or remain on duty" for a longer period than that prescribed, since such carriers and employees are defined in section 1 as those who are engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad in the District of Columbia or the territories, or in interstate or foreign commerce, although that section further defines "railroad" as including all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any carrier operating a railroad by contract, agreement, or lease; and "employees" as meaning persons actually engaged in, or connected with, the movement of any train. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1911) 221 U. S. 612, 31 S. Ct. 621, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 878.

Period of duty.—Where an interstate carrier had a rule requiring engineers to report thirty minutes before leaving time, during which they were required to overlook their engines in preparation for the trip, to see that they were properly oiled and the brakes O. K., and to connect the engines with their trains, the time so occupied constituted a part of their term of duty and this though it was the custom of the carrier not to strictly enforce the rule. U. S. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 630.

Train dispatchers, being "employees," are within the protection of the main part of this section giving to all employees "at least eight consecutive hours off duty" in each day, counting from some point in the next day, so that it would be impossible for carriers to require of them short-service periods spread over the entire twenty-four hours, giving no opportunity for real recuperation. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 114, affirmed (1911) 220 U. S. 37, 31 S. Ct. 362, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 361.

1909 Supp., p. 584, sec. 4.

Reports from carriers.—Authority to require the secretary or similar officer of the carriers subject to the Act to make monthly reports under oath, showing the instances where employees subject to the Act have rendered excess service, and giving the cause and explanatory facts, if any, or, where there has been no excess service, to make a separate oath to that effect in lieu of the form to be used in detailing excess service, was conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission by the provision of this section empowering it to call to its aid in the enforcement of the Act "all powers granted to it," when read in connection with the Act of June 18, 1910, 36 Stat. L. 550, ch. 309, sec. 14, ante, this Supplement, p. 125, authorizing the commission to require the carriers to file periodical or special reports under oath concerning any matter about which it is by law authorized or required to keep itself informed, or which it is required to enforce. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1911) 221 U. S. 612, 31 S. Ct. 622, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 878.

The constitutional protection against unreasonable searches and seizures is not denied by an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission requiring the secretary or other similar officer of the carriers subject to this Act, regulating the hours of labor of employees, to make monthly reports under oath, showing the instances where employees subject to the Act have rendered excess service, and giving the cause and explanatory facts, if any, or, where there has been no excess service, to make a separate oath to that effect, in lieu of the form to be used in detailing excess service. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1911) 221 U. S. 612, 31 S. Ct. 621, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 878.

Self-crimination.—Carriers subject to the Act cannot claim privilege against self-crimination to justify the refusal to comply with an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, requiring the secretary or similar officer to make monthly reports under oath, showing the instances where employees subject to the Act have rendered excess service, and giving the cause and explanatory facts, if any, or, where there has been no excess service, to make a separate oath to that effect, in lieu of the form to be used in detailing excess service. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1911) 221 U. S. 612, 31 S. Ct. 621, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 878.

Neither can the secretary or similar officer of a carrier subject to this Act claim a personal privilege against self-crimination to justify a refusal to comply with an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, requiring such official to make such monthly reports under oath. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1911) 221 U. S. 612, 31 S. Ct. 621, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 878.

1909 Supp., p. 584, sec. 1.

Constitutionality.—This Act is a valid exercise of the powers granted by Congress by the commerce clause of the Constitution, as it is confined to common carriers by rail engaged in interstate commerce and employees while thus actually engaged. Mondou v. New York, etc., R. Co., 223 U. S. 1, 32 S. Ct. 169; Watson v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 942; Walsh v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 494; Zikos v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 893; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Conley, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 949; Owens v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1910) 113 Minn. 49, 128 N. W. 1011.

Due process of law.—This Act is not unconstitutional as depriving railroad companies of their property or liberty to contract without due process of law, in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution. Mondou v. New York, etc., R. Co., 223 U. S. 1, 32 S. Ct. 169; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Conley, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 949.

Equal protection of law.—This Act is not unconstitutional as denying the equal protection of the laws to the carriers affected thereby. Mondou v. New York, etc., R. Co., 223 U. S. 1, 32 S. Ct. 169; Zikos v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 893.

Delegation of judicial power.—This Act does not attempt to delegate judicial power of the United States to state courts, in violation of article 3 of the Constitution, but creates substantive rights not solely cognizable in the federal courts, but which may be availed of in any court of competent jurisdiction, state or federal. Zikos v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 893.

State laws.—This Act making railroads engaged in interstate commerce liable for injuring or killing employees while similarly engaged, is plenary, and supersedes all laws of the states relating thereto. Mondou v. New York, etc., R. Co., 223 U. S. 1, 32 S. Ct. 169; Dewberry v. Southern R. Co., (1910) 175 Fed. 307; Taylor v. Southern R. Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 380; Bottoms v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 318.

The federal Employer's Liability Act does not conflict with, so as to supersede, a state statute providing that a cause of action for personal injuries shall survive in favor of the personal representative of the injured party, the recovery inuring to the exclusive benefit of the widow or next kin, it not creating a right of action, but only preserving one which would have otherwise abated on the injured person's death. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hesterly, (Ark. 1911) 135 S. W. 875.

Since Congress has not required railroads engaged in interstate commerce to fill or block switches, frogs, and guard rails on their roads, a state law requiring railroads so to do does not conflict with this Act, whereby Congress assumed jurisdiction over injuries to employees engaged in interstate commerce. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. McNamare, (1909) 91 Ark. 515, 122 S. W. 103.

Jurisdiction.—This Act is remedial in character, and should be so construed as to prevent the mischief and advance the remedy, and an action based thereon may be maintained either in the state or federal courts. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Conley, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 949; Bradbury v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 149 Ia. 51, 128 N. W. 2.

"The suggestion that the Act of Congress is not in harmony with the policy of the state, and therefore that the courts of the state are free to decline jurisdiction, is quite inadmissible, because it presupposes what in legal contemplation does not exist. When Congress, in the exertion of the power confided to it by the Constitution, adopted that Act, it spoke for all the people and all the states, and thereby established a policy for all. That policy is as much the policy of Connecticut as if the Act had emanated from its own legislature, and should be respected accordingly in the courts of the state. . . . We are not disposed to believe that the exercise of jurisdiction by the state courts will be attended by any appreciable inconvenience or confusion; but, be this as it may, it affords no reason for declining a jurisdiction conferred by law." Van Devanter, J., in Mondou v. New York, etc., R. Co., 223 U. S. 1, 32 S. Ct. 169.

Where a suit brought under this Act involved a determination of the meaning of the phrase "person employed by such carrier in interstate commerce," it was held that federal jurisdiction existed, even though the complaint should be dismissed because plaintiff was not a person so employed. Colasurdo v.

New Jersey Cent. R. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 832.

District of trial.—Act Cong. March 3, 1887, ch. 373, sec. 1, 24 Stat. L. 552, as corrected by Act Aug. 13, 1888, ch. 866, sec. 1, 25 Stat. L. 433, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 265, provides that no civil suit shall be brought before either the Circuit or District Courts against any person, by any original process or proceeding, in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states suits shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either plaintiff or defendant. It has been held that where an action for injuries to a servant was brought under the federal Employer's Liability Act federal jurisdiction did not depend solely on diverse citizenship but was also sustainable as depending on the construction of such Act, and hence the suit could not be maintained over defendant's objection in a district other than that in which defendant was an inhabitant. Smith v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 506.

Removal to federal court.—An action against a railroad company for an injury to an employee, brought under and in reliance upon this act, where the declaration contains no statement or suggestion that the result of the suit will depend upon the construction of the act, is not removable on the ground that it is one arising under a law of the United States. Nelson v. Southern R. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 478.

Pleading.—In order to rely on a federal statute as the basis of a cause of action or defense, the pleadings must allege facts bringing the case within the statute, and an action against a railroad company for damages for an injury resulting in the death of an employee was not based upon the Federal Employer's Liability Act, where the complaint alleged that the defendant "was a railroad corporation operating a line of railroad in the state of Oklahoma, and was . . . common carrier of freight and passengers for hire," in that state, but did not allege that it was engaged in interstate commerce, or that decedent was injured while employed by it in connection with such commerce. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hesterly, (Ark. 1911) 135 S. W. 875. See also Walton v. Southern R. Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 175.

In a railroad servant's action for injuries, where the petition does not disclose that the suit is based on the federal statute, it will be held that plaintiff is not seeking recovery for an injury received while engaged in interstate commerce, and the sufficiency of the petition must be tested by the state law. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Hawley, (Tex. 1909) 123 S. W. 726; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Neaves, (Tex. 1910) 127 S. W. 1091.

An employee of a railroad who seeks to avail himself of the act making railroads, while engaging in interstate or foreign commerce, liable for injuries to employees, has the burden of showing that his duties while an employee directly pertained to interstate or foreign commerce, and an employee of a railroad engaging in interstate commerce, who shows that he was injured while loading rails on a flat car, in consequence of the negligence of fellow servants, but who does not show whether the rails were old or new, where they came from, where they were to be taken, or where the car was to go when loaded, is not entitled to the benefit of the act. Tamura v. Great Northern R. Co., (1910) 58 Wash. 316, 108 Pac. 774.

Necessity for pleading statute. — Where the petition of an employee in an action against a railroad company to recover for a personal injury alleges facts which bring the case within the Federal Employer's Liability Act, it is governed by such act, whether specifically declared on or not. Smith v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 506; Whittaker v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 130; Southern R. Co. v. Ansley, (1910) 8 Ga. App. 325, 68 S. E. 1087.

Contributory negligence. — In an action under this act, for injuries to a trackman in a railroad yard, by being struck by certain passenger cars, kicked along the track, it was held that contributory negligence was no defense. Colasurdo v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 832.

Negligence of fellow servant. — Under this act a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce is liable to the extent therein provided to an employee injured while assisting in carrying on such commerce, when the injury results from the negligence of a fellow servant, if such fellow servant is also engaged in interstate commerce. Zikos v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 893.

Where the plaintiff, a track walker, was injured while assisting certain fellow employees in repairing a switch in a railroad yard, by being struck by certain cars, kicked toward him, and from the relative position of plaintiff and his fellow employee the jury could have found that plaintiff was relying on them to look out for trains approaching from that direction, their failure to warn him constituted negligence of fellow servants which, as provided by Federal Employer's Liability Act, was an actionable negligence of the railroad company. Colasurdo v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 832.

Violation of Safety Appliance Act. — Under the Employer's Liability Act where a railroad company moved a car being used in interstate commerce having a coupler so defective that it would not couple automatically by impact, as required by Act March 2, 1893, ch. 196, sec. 2, 27 Stat. L. 531, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 753, and an employee, while attempting to remedy the defect in the performance of his duty, was caught between the cars and injured, the violation of the statute by the company was a contributing cause of the injury, which rendered it liable therefor; the questions of assumption of risk and contributory negligence being immaterial, under sections 3 and 4 of this act. Johnson v. Great Northern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 643.

Must be engaged in interstate commerce. — In order to establish a cause of action under this act, the offending carrier at the time of the injury must be engaged in interstate commerce and the injury must be suffered by the employee while employed by such carrier in such commerce. Pedersen v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 737; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hesterly, (Ark. 1911) 135 S. W. 875.

Trains carrying construction material. — In Pedersen v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 737, it appeared that the defendant railroad company engaged in interstate and intrastate business at the time of plaintiff's injury was building an additional track near Hoboken, N. J., part of which was laid on a bridge. The plaintiff, an employee engaged in the bridge construction, was injured while carrying material from one part of the work to another, by a local train running between two points in New Jersey. It was held that the injury was inflicted by the carrier as the result of the operation of a train engaged wholly in intrastate business, and plaintiff could not recover under this act.

Operation. — The Employer's Liability Act is not retroactive, and does not authorize an action for the wrongful death by the administrator of an employee engaged in interstate commerce against his master occurring prior to the time the act took effect. Winfree v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 65.

Survival of cause of action. — The cause of action for an injury to an employee of an interstate carrier by railroad, given by this section, does not survive the death of the person injured, and damages for his conscious suffering are not recoverable in an action for his death. Walsh v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 494.

Damages. — In an action for the death of a railroad brakeman under this act, providing that the recovery shall inure to the benefit of deceased's family, an instruction permitting a recovery for the loss sustained by decedent's children, consisting of their loss of care, attention, instruction, and training, from their father's death, was not erroneous. Duke v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 684.

Res judicata. — Judgment, in a suit under a state statute brought by plaintiff in behalf of herself and her minor children for negligent death of her husband, bars a subsequent suit by her as administratrix, under this act, difference in the capacity in which she sued not affecting the identity of the parties to the suit. Troxell v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 540.

Servant employed in interstate commerce. — An employee of a railroad company, charged with the duty of seeing to the coupling of cars and of the air brake pipes upon cars standing upon a switch track to be transferred to another company, some of which cars were being used in interstate commerce, was being employed in interstate commerce, and was within the provisions of the Employer's Liability Act. Johnson v. Great Northern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 654.

Trackman. — This Act includes within its scope all persons who could be included within the constitutional power of Congress, and hence includes a trackman engaged in the repair of a switch connected with a track used for both interstate and intrastate commerce. Colasurdo v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 832.

A section hand working on the track of a railroad over which both interstate and intrastate traffic is moved is employed in "interstate commerce" within the meaning of this act and within its protection. Zikos v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 893.

1909 Supp., p. 584, sec. 2.

Jurisdiction of federal courts.—This section which makes common carriers by railroad within the territories of the United States liable for injuries to employees as therein stated, supersedes the common law in the territories with respect to such liability, and any cause of action within its terms is necessarily one arising under a law of the United States and on that ground within the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, where the requisite amount is involved. Cound v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 527.

Where an action for injuries to a servant arose solely on the Federal Employer's Liability Act, the federal Circuit Court had original jurisdiction without reference to the citizenship of the parties. Clark v. Southern Pac. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 122.

District of suit.—An action in a federal court on a cause of action arising under a law of the United States, although the parties are citizens of different states, is not one in which "jurisdiction is founded only" on diversity of citizenship, within the meaning of the Federal Judiciary Act of 1875 (Act March 3, 1875, 137, sec. 1, 18 Stat. L. 470), as amended in 1887 (Act March 3, 1887, ch.

A member of a railroad bridge gang injured, while engaged and within the scope of his employment in repairing bridges, by an alleged defective scaffold, though his duties required work in the repair of bridges for the railroad company in different states, was held not to be "employed in interstate commerce," within the Employer's Liability Act. Taylor v. Southern R. Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 381.

373, 24 Stat. L. 552) and 1888 (Act Aug. 13, 1888, ch. 866, 25 Stat. L. 433, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 265), and, unless the objection is waived, can only be brought in the district of which defendant is an inhabitant. Cound v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 527.

Petition.—Where a petition in an action against an interstate carrier for injuries to a brakeman in one of the territories of the United States alleged injury to the plaintiff by the negligence of a carrier while the plaintiff was in the performance of his duty, it sufficiently showed that the action was based on the Federal Employer's Liability Act, though it did not so allege in terms. Clark v. Southern Pac. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 122.

Temporary separation of husband and wife.—That a wife was temporarily separated from her husband at the time he was killed while in the defendant's employ did not affect her right to recover damages under the Employer's Liability Act, for his wrongful death. Dunbar v. Charleston, etc., R. Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 175.

1909 Supp., p. 585, sec. 3.

Failure to apply rule of comparative negligence.—In an action for personal injuries received by a railroad employee, the defendant cannot complain that the rule of comparative negligence under this section was not applied where the jury were instructed to find for the plaintiff only in event of the defendant's negligence and plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence, and the latter rule being more favorable to defendant. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Averill, (Tex. 1911) 136 S. W. 98.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

Vol. VI, p. 761, sec. 5357.

Sufficiency of indictment.—Under this section it is not essential to allege in the indictment that the property was received without the consent of the owner or with intent to deprive him of its use and benefit, the criminal intent and evil purpose of the receiver being sufficiently alleged where his act is characterized as unlawful and felonious. Bise v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 374, 7 Ann. Cas. 165.

An indictment charging that defendants on a certain date, within a certain district of the Indian Territory, unlawfully, feloniously, and knowing the same to have been previously stolen, did receive certain described property which had been previously feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away from the owner, was held to sufficiently charge the offense of receiving stolen goods within this section. Bise v. U. S., (1904) 5 Ind. Ter. 602, 82 S. W. 921.

Vol. VI, p. 761, sec. 2.

Evidence of similar offenses.—In a prosecution under this act, for knowingly receiving property stolen from a navy yard of the United States, on the question of knowledge, it was held that evidence was admissible to show that the defendant had received and purchased articles of the same general character stolen from such navy yard at other times. Sapir v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 219.

RECORDS.

Vol. VI, p. 764, sec. 5403.

Definition.—In this section which makes it a criminal offense to steal or destroy “any record, paper, or proceeding of a court of justice,” or “any paper or document or record filed or deposited in any public office or with any judicial or public officer,” the words “record” and “document” are not limited in their meaning to the technical common-law records of courts as enrolled, or to technical documents, but mean any paper filed and which becomes a part of the records of the court or office, broadly speaking, and is treated as a record of what it contains. McInerney v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 729, 74 C. C. A. 655.

Imperfect or incorrectly kept records.—It is not a defense to a prosecution under this section for stealing or destroying a record of a court that such record was technically imperfect or incorrectly kept. McInerney v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 729, 74 C. C. A. 655.

Papers in naturalization proceedings.—The original application of an alien for naturalization filed in a court of the United States, together with the affidavits, certificates, and record of proceedings thereon, preserved in the office of the clerk, bound in one of a series of books kept for the purpose, and which are evidence of the rights of the applicant as a citizen, constitute a record of the court within the meaning of this section, and the stealing or destruction of any part thereof is a criminal offense thereunder. McInerney v. U. S., (1906) 143 Fed. 729, 74 C. C. A. 655.

Vol. VI, p. 764, sec. 5408.

“Custody” means keeping, and implies responsibility for the protection and preservation of the person or thing in custody. A document in a public office in the general custody of a commissioner and in the particular custody of a chief clerk, under whom five or six subordinate clerks are employed who have access to it in order to discharge their duties, is not in the custody of one of the latter. Martin v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 198, 93 C. C. A. 484, reversing (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 451, 104 S. W. 678.

The words “take away or withdraw” in this section, must be read with the word “destroys,” and they mean a taking away or withdrawal whereby some injury is intended, attempted, or inflicted upon the record or document, or upon some one who has an interest in it and is entitled to use it. Martin v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 198, 93 C. C. A. 484, reversing (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 451, 104 S. W. 678.

One of the clerks of the commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, employed at a salary of $1,200 a year, under authority granted by Congress to the Secretary of the Interior, to employ all assistance necessary to perform the duties of the commissioners to those tribes, was not an officer of the United States, and was not punishable under this section. Martin v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 198, 93 C. C. A. 484, reversing (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 451, 104 S. W. 678.

Indictment.—An allegation that an act, innocent in itself, but criminal if done “fraudulently,” was performed fraudulently, or with an intent to defraud, without the averment of any acts or facts tending to show fraud, is a legal conclusion and futile. It is insufficient to charge the offense of fraudulently taking away or removing a record or document under this section. Martin v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 198, 93 C. C. A. 484, reversing (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 451, 104 S. W. 678.

REPORTS (LAW).

Vol. VI, p. 768, sec. 1.

Copyright by official reporter. — Conceding the right of the official reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States to secure a copyright in his work in the volumes of published reports, the mere arrangement of reported cases in sequence, and their paging and distribution into volumes, are not features of such importance as to entitle him to copyright protection of such details. Banks Law Pub. Co. v. Lawyers' Co-Operative Pub. Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 386, 17 Ann. Cas. 957, 94 C. C. A. 642.

REVENUE MARINE—REVENUE CUTTER SERVICE.

1909 Supp., p. 597, sec. 5.

Service in the Revenue-Cutter Service. — Officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who during the civil war served upon vessels of that service which were armed, manned, and equipped as were naval vessels, and were engaged in conjunction with the navy in hostile operations against the enemy, "served in the naval forces of the United States" within the meaning of this section, and upon retirement, are entitled to have the rank and to receive three-fourths of the duty pay and increase of the next higher grade to that held by them at the time of retirement. The mere fact that an officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service was in that service during the civil war would not be sufficient to establish that he had "served during the civil war in the land or naval forces" if the location and character of his services were such that he did and could have done nothing more during the time of the civil war than he would have done in time of peace. If, however, the location of his vessel and the consequent range of his duties were such that he necessarily filled a place which must or would probably have been otherwise assigned to some other public armed force, then the fact that he did not take part in any engagement or actual conflict with the enemy will not deprive him of the benefits of this act. (1908) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 8.

RIVERS, HARBORS, AND CANALS.

Vol. VI, p. 787, sec. 2476.

Construction. — Under this section the waters of navigable rivers within the territory specified are declared to be public highways; but the section does not reserve the bed of the stream, but does declare that when the opposite banks of any stream, not navigable, belong to different persons, the stream and the bed thereof shall become common to both. This Act of Congress means that navigable streams, within the territory to be disposed of, shall be deemed to be and remain public highways, subject to the public easement; that the public should enjoy its free and uninterrupted navigation, unobstructed by dams, bridges, or other structures which might impede its commerce; the intention of Congress being to reserve the use of the rivers for the public without interference with the riparian owner, and the latter to have his right to the bed of the stream without interference with jus publicum. Johnson v. Johnson, (1908) 14 Idaho 561, 95 Pac. 499.

Navigable streams in Alaska are public highways, and no portion of the bed or land lying between high and low water mark is subject to entry or sale under the public land laws. U. S. v. Roth, (1904) 2 Alaska 257.

Vol. VI, p. 792, sec. 4.

Constitutionality.—This section which makes it the duty of the Secretary of War "to prescribe such rules and regulations for the use, administration, and navigation of any or all canals and similar works of navigation that now are or hereafter may be, owned, operated, or maintained by the United States as in his judgment the public necessity may require," and makes a wilful violation of such rules and regulations a criminal offense punishable as therein provided, impliedly forbids the use of canals owned by the United States, under penalty of criminal prosecution, except in compliance with such rules and regulations, and the delegation of power to make the same to an administrative department is constitutional. U. S. v. Moody, (1908) 164 Fed. 269.

• Rule 8 of the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of War for the government of St. Mary's Falls Canal, owned by the United States, which provides that "the movements of all vessels, boats, or other floating things, in the canal shall be under the direction of the superintendent and his assistants, whose orders and instructions must be obeyed," is within the authority conferred on him by this act, to make regulations for the operation of all canals owned, operated, or maintained by the United States, and valid; and an order given by the superintendent or an assistant, for the movement of a vessel, is but the carrying into effect of such rule, and not the making of a special rule, and the disobedience of such an order is a violation of the rule, made punishable as a criminal offense under the statute. U. S. v. Moody, (1908) 164 Fed. 269.

Vol. VI, p. 793, sec. 5.

Necessity for publication of regulations.—Regulations made pursuant to this section, providing for the opening of drawbridges across navigable streams, and that the Secretary of War shall make such rules and regulations as public necessity requires, which regulations, when made and published, shall have the force of law, have no force until duly published, so that a steamboat owner would not be negligent in not observing rules not published. Fugina v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 142 Wis. 144, 125 N. W. 981.

Publication a jury question.—Fugina v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1910) 142 Wis. 144, 125 N. W. 981.

Vol. VI, p. 796, sec. 1.

Jurisdiction.—Under this Act which makes it a criminal offense to dump refuse in the tidal waters of New York Harbor within prescribed limits, or to deviate from the dumping grounds specified in a permit granted thereunder, an offense is not committed until refuse is dumped in some prohibited place, and such place fixes the locus of the crime and the venue for its prosecution. U. S. v. Newark Meadows Imp. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 426.

Vol. VI, p. 801, sec. 4.

Refund of penalty.—Prior to the taking effect of the Act of Feb. 14, 1903, 32 Stat. L. 825, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 58, creating the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Secretary of the Treasury had no authority to remit a fine or penalty imposed for a violation of this act, nor to discontinue a suit instituted by the government to recover a penalty thereunder, and therefore the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has no authority to direct the discontinuance of such a suit. (1904) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 220.

The word "vessels" as used in this Act does not relate to vessels in the sense contemplated by sections 5292-5294, Revised Statutes, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 101-104, authorizing the remission of fines, penalties, and forfeitures by the Secretary of the Treasury. (1904) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 220.

Vol. VI, p. 805, sec. 9.

Change of authorized bridge.—A railroad bridge over a navigable stream, built under authority of an Act of Congress, which contained no reserve as to repeal, modification, or alteration, can only be required to be moved or replaced by a new bridge constructed, in accordance with this act, by an Act of Congress authorizing the same and providing for just compensation. U. S. v. Parkersburg Branch R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 224.

Rebuilding bridge.—Neither the provision of this section 9 that "it shall not be lawful to construct or commence the construction of any bridge . . . until the consent of Congress to the building of such structures shall have been obtained," not of section 10, prohibiting "the creation of any obstruction not affirmatively authorized by Congress," applies to the rebuilding of a bridge which was lawfully in existence when the act was passed. Rogers Sand Co. v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 7. Compare Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Meadows, (Tex. 1909) 120 S. W. 521, in which it was held that where a railroad company tore down a wood bridge, and erected in its place a new steel structure, it was a "construction" of a bridge within the federal statute.

Navigable waters entirely within the limits of a state.—No one may build a bridge over a navigable river within the limits of one state without the concurrent permission of the state and national governments. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Meadows, (Tex. 1909) 120 S. W. 521.

Vol. VI, p. 813, sec. 10.

State and federal assent both necessary.—This act requiring the consent of the Secretary of War on the approval of the chief of engineers to the construction of public works in any navigable waterway within the United States, does not transfer exclusive control over navigable waters entirely within the limits of a state to the federal authorities, but the right of private persons to erect structures in such waters is dependent upon the concurrent or joint consent of both the state and federal governments. Cobb v. Lincoln Park, (1903) 202 Ill. 427, 67 N. E. 5; Minnesota Canal, etc., Co. v. Pratt, (1907)

In (1906) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 601, it was held that the Hudson Highland Bridge and Railway Company, a corporation created by the legislature of the state of New York, with authority to construct a bridge across the Hudson River between two points in the state of New York, could not lawfully build such bridge without first obtaining the consent of Congress as required by this section.

101 Minn. 197, 112 N. W. 395; Wilson v. Hudson County Water Co., (1910) 76 N. J. Eq. 543, 76 Atl. 560.

Water pipes across river.—Under this section a water pipe across a river if built according to plans recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War, is deemed to be affirmatively authorized by Congress, and is a lawful structure without any further action by Congress, although the affirmative authority arises by implication. Maine Water Co. v. Knickerbocker Steam Towing Co., (1905) 99 Me. 473, 59 Atl. 953.

Vol. VI, p. 815, sec. 12.

Acquittal under this section as bar to civil suit.—The acquittal of a defendant indicted under this section for creating an obstruction in a navigable stream, in violation of section 10, is not a bar to a subsequent suit in equity brought by the United States under the same section against the same defendant to compel the removal of such obstruction; the issues and measures of proof required in the two proceedings not being the same. U. S. v. Donaldson-Shultz Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 581.

Vol. VI, p. 816, sec. 13.

Liability of vessel.—This section and section 16 of this act prohibiting the deposit of refuse matter in any navigable water of the United States, and making any vessel used in such illegal act liable for the pecuniary penalties imposed therefrom, are within the constitutional powers of Congress, and to render a vessel subject to such penalties it is not essential that some person or corporation should have previously been convicted thereunder. The Scow No. 9, (1907) 152 Fed. 548.

Vol. VI, p. 817, sec. 15.

Scope of section.—While this section providing that it shall not be lawful to tie up or anchor vessels or other craft in navigable channels "in such manner as to prevent or obstruct the passage of other vessels or craft," was not intended to absolutely prohibit the anchoring in navigable channels, it makes it unlawful whenever the result is to obstruct other vessels in passing to such extent as to make such passing a dangerous manœuvre; and the fact that other vessels have succeeded in passing one so anchored in safety is not proof that her anchorage was not in violation of the statute, or that she was not in fault for a collision with another vessel which was attempting to pass. The Cald., (1907) 153 Fed. 837, 83 C. C. A. 19.

Abandonment.—Under this section and section 19 of this act which provide that whenever any vessel or other craft is wrecked and sunk in a navigable channel, accidentally or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the owner to immediately mark it with a buoy or beacon during the day and a lighted lantern at night, and maintain such marks until it is removed or abandoned, and to at once commence the removal of the same, and that if not removed within thirty days, or if sooner abandoned, it may be broken up or removed by the Secretary of War, the neglect to mark a sunken craft as required is not a prima facie abandonment, nor is the failure to remove it an abandonment until the expiration of thirty days, and during all such time it is the duty of the owner to keep the place marked, and if he does not he is liable for injuries caused to others thereby unless there has been an actual abandonment. People's Coal Co. v. Second Pool Coal Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 609.

Dredge anchored in narrow channel.—In The City of Birmingham, (1905) 138 Fed. 555, 71 C. C. A. 115, it appeared that a dredge, anchored at night within 200 feet of the centre of the narrow channel of the Savannah river, at a point not far above a sharp bend, and where a seven-foot tide ebbed and flowed, was struck and sunk by an ascending steamer. The dredge was of light draft, and could have anchored in a place of safety entirely outside the channel; the only reason given for not doing so being the inconvenience of moving from the place where she was working. It was held that such anchorage obstructed the passage of other vessels, in violation of this section, and that the dredge was chargeable with contributory fault for the collision.

Vessel anchored in wide channel.—A vessel anchored at night in calm weather, as the result of a previous collision, in Hampton Roads in the middle of the channel, which was there a mile or more wide for seagoing vessels, was not chargeable with violation of this section, prohibiting vessels from anchoring in navigable channels in such manner as to prevent or obstruct the passage of other vessels: and where she carried proper lights and kept an anchor watch who gave due warning by signals to an approaching schooner, the latter was solely in fault for a collision between them. The Job H. Jackson, (1906) 144 Fed. 897, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 1021.

Aiding of vessel grounded or in difficulty.—This section which makes it unlawful to anchor or tie up any vessel in a navigable channel in such manner as to prevent or obstruct the passage of other vessels, was not intended to prevent the aiding of a vessel grounded or in difficulty, even if it involves the temporary obstruction of a channel. The Waverley, (1907) 155 Fed. 436.

Reasonable time for marking sunken vessel.—The owner of a canal boat which was sunk in the channel of the Hudson river, who failed for two days without good excuse to mark the place, as required by this section, did not act within a reasonable time, and was liable for damages done to another vessel by collision with the wreck. The Macy, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 930.

Vol. VI, p. 817, sec. 16.

Liability of vessel.—This section and section 13 of this Act prohibiting the deposit of refuse matter in any of the navigable waters of the United States, and making any vessel used in such illegal act liable for the pecuniary penalties imposed therefor, were enacted in the exercise, for the public good, of the police powers inherent in the government, and a vessel so used is subject to such penalties, although the act was without the knowledge or intent of her owner and contrary to his general instructions. Scow No. 36, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 932.

Where the owner of a dumping scow placed a man in sole charge with power to dump her

Amount of precaution necessary. — This section, providing that it shall be unlawful to tie up or anchor vessels or other craft in navigable channels in such manner as to prevent or obstruct the passage of other vessels, was held not to condemn a lighter which, compelled to anchor in the Hudson river, because of a dense fog, made her way to the side on which were the anchorage grounds, as far as was considered safe, and anchored after taking soundings which indicated that she was within the grounds; the exercise of precautions commensurate with the danger being all that was required. The Newburgh, (1904) 130 Fed. 321, 64 C. C. A. 567.

Liability of owner for failure to mark wreck.—This section which provides that, whenever a vessel is wrecked and sunk in a navigable channel, "it shall be the duty of the owner of such sunken craft to immediately mark it with a buoy or beacon during the day and a lighted lantern at night," places such duty upon the owner, and no one else, and he cannot shift the responsibility for an injury to another vessel, resulting from his failure to perform it, upon tugs which caused the wreck by their fault, when he had notice of the situation in ample time to have performed the duty before damages resulted. The Anna M. Fahy, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 866.

"Owner."—In People's Coal Co. v. Second Pool Coal Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 609, it appeared that the respondent, a coal company, having in its possession as bailee a coal flat partly loaded with coal, moored to its float in the Allegheny river in Pittsburgh, cast it loose during a flood, and it sank some distance below. The place was not marked, and some three weeks later the libellant's vessel ran into it and was injured. It was held that the respondent was the "owner," within the meaning of this section, and removed to mark the place until the flat was removed or abandoned, and it appearing that there had been no abandonment, that the respondent was liable to the libellant for the injury to its vessel.

load, and he, becoming unnecessarily alarmed at the roughness of the sea while being towed to the dumping grounds, dumped a part of her load into the waters of a harbor, in violation of section 13, it was held that the scow was subject to the penalty imposed by section 16, although the action of the scowman was contrary to the orders of the owner; but that the towing tug, although the property of the same owner, where the master had no reason to anticipate the violation of the statute, could not be said to have been "used or employed" in such violation, and was not subject to the penalty thereof. The Scow No. 9, (1907) 152 Fed. 548.

Vol. VI, p. 818, sec. 18.

Constitutionality — Taking private property for public use without past compensation.—The making of the alterations or changes in a bridge erected under the sanction of a state over an interstate waterway, which the Secretary of War, acting under the authority of this section, requires to secure navigation against an unreasonable obstruction, is not a taking of private property for public use for which the Federal Constitution requires compensation to be made, but is merely incidental to the exercise by the government of its power to regulate commerce among the states. Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., (1907) 204 U. S. 364, 27 S. Ct. 367, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 523, affirming (1906) 143 Fed. 377; Monongahela Bridge Co. v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 177, 30 S. Ct. 356, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 435.

Delegation of power.—Legislative and judicial powers are not unconstitutionally delegated to the Secretary of War by the provision of this section, empowering that official, when satisfied, after a hearing of the parties interested, that a bridge over a navigable waterway of the United States is an unreasonable obstruction to navigation, to require such changes or alterations as will render navigation reasonably safe, easy, and unobstructed. Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., (1907) 204 U. S. 364, 27 S. Ct. 367, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 523, affirming (1906) 143 Fed. 377; Monongahela Bridge Co. v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 177, 30 S. Ct. 356, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 435, affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 712; (1904) 25 Op. Att.-Gen. 195.

Power of Secretary of War.—The Secretary of War is not invested with arbitrary power in the premises by the provision of this section empowering him, when satisfied that a bridge over an interstate waterway is an unreasonable obstruction to navigation, to require such changes or alterations as will render navigation reasonably free, easy, and unobstructive, since he is bound, before making any decision or taking final action, to notify the parties interested of any proposed investigation by him to give them an opportunity to be heard, and to allow reasonable time to make such alterations as he finds to be necessary to free navigation. Monongahela Bridge Co. v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 177, 30 S. Ct. 356, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 435.

Notice signed by Assistant Secretary of War.—A notice to a bridge company to make certain alterations in a bridge over an interstate waterway, conformably to this section, is not insufficient in case of noncompliance because it bears the signature of the Assistant Secretary of War, instead of the Secretary himself, who is the official named in the statute as the one to give such notice, where the communication shows upon its face that it was from the War Department, and from the Secretary of War, and that the latter, without abrogating his authority under the statute, only used the hand of the Assistant Secretary in order to give the owners of the bridge notice of what was required of them. Hannibal Bridge Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 194, 31 S. Ct. 603, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 699.

Applicable to bridges authorized by Congress.—The authority conferred upon the Secretary of War by this section to require any bridge constructed over any navigable water of the United States which is an unreasonable obstruction to navigation to be so altered as to render navigation under it reasonably free, easy, and unobstructed, applies to bridges constructed under the authority of Acts of Congress, provision having been made in the previous sections for the case of structures of that nature unauthorized by Congress. (1904) 25 Op. Att.-Gen. 195.

Rights in unused navigable stream.—Where a private canal constructed and used as a cut-off to take the place commercially of the tortuous channel of a navigable stream had been abandoned, and its uses for such purposes entirely destroyed by the owner of the rights therein, it was held that the rights of the public reverted to the original channel of the stream, and that the United States might maintain a suit to enjoin the obstruction of such channel by a bridge. U. S. v. Jamaica, etc., Turnpike Road, (1910) 183 Fed. 598.

Hearing.—A bridge company convicted for failure to make the alterations in a bridge over an interstate waterway which the Secretary of War, acting under the authority of this section, requires, was afforded the reasonable opportunity to be heard, upon the question whether the bridge was, in fact, an unreasonable obstruction to navigation, where the company had full notice of the action of the officer of engineers, who, under the order of the Secretary, made a tentative examination of the facts, and appeared at the regular final hearing before that officer with liberty to contest the facts, and introduce any evidence pertinent to the case, and the decision of the Secretary of War was based on the engineer officer's report of all the facts adduced before him, and which constituted the basis of his conclusion that the bridge was an unreasonable obstruction to navigation. Monongahela Bridge Co. v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 177, 30 S. Ct. 356, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 435.

"Material obstructions."—The obstructions to navigation which the Secretary of War by this section is authorized to prevent or to remove at the expense of the owner, without compensation, are "material" obstructions. (1904) 25 Op. Att.-Gen. 195.

Vol. VI, p. 820, sec. 19.

Authority of Secretary of War.—This section, relating to rivers and harbors, and authorizing the Secretary of War at his discretion to remove obstructions from the navigable waters of the United States, did not invest the Secretary of War with exclusive jurisdiction of the removal of obstructions, but was intended to clothe him with discretionary power, which he might exert or leave to the enforcement of the local authorities, and if he fails or declines to act, the local authorities may protect their domestic commerce by keeping navigable waters in their jurisdiction unobstructed. Hagan v. Richmond, (1905) 104 Va. 723, 52 S. E. 385.

Personal liability of owner.—This section relating to the removal of obstructions from navigable waters, and limiting the liability of the owners of vessels without personal negligence, is paramount, and a state Act and city ordinance declaring that the board of harbor commissioners shall remove any wreck injurious to the harbor at the owner's expense are invalid, unless the obstruction occurs with the privity or knowledge of the owner. Hagan v. Richmond, (1905) 104 Va. 723, 52 S. E. 385.

Vol. VI, p. 821, sec. 20, par. third.

Act of 1890.—The provision of Act Cong. Sept. 19, 1890, ch. 907, 26 Stat. L. 454, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 805 note, prohibiting the maintenance of obstructions to navigation in navigable streams, is not inconsistent with this Act, prohibiting the erection of such obstructions. U. S. v. Wishkah Boom Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 42, 68 C. C. A. 592, (1906) 202 U. S. 613, 26 S. Ct. 765, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1171.

Vol. VI, p. 825, sec. 1.

Construction of statute.—This Act providing for governing the movements and anchorage of vessels and rafts in St. Mary's river, from Point Iroquois on Lake Superior to Point Detour on Lake Huron, does not take all the waters on the American side of the boundary line out of the provision of the treaty by which they were found to be a part of Lake Huron, nor change the character of the water from a lake into a river, the term "St. Mary's river" being used for convenience in designating the waters between the two points mentioned for the purposes of navigation. Ainsworth v. Munoskong Hunting, etc., Club, (1909) 159 Mich. 61, 123 N. W. 803.

Vol. VI, p. 827. [Condemnation, purchase, etc.]

Authority of Secretary of War.—By this Act the Secretary of War is directly given the right to institute proceedings for "condemnation of any land, right of way, or material needed to enable him to maintain, operate, or prosecute works for the improvement of rivers and harbors for which provision has been made by law," and under such Act he is intrusted with the power and duty of determining specifically what land, right of way, or material is needed for such works as are authorized by law. U. S. v. Certain Lands in Narragansett, (1906) 145 Fed. 654.

Vol. VI, p. 836, sec. 2.

Subsequent ratification by Congress is a sufficient answer to the contention that the title of the United States to the Isthmian or Panama canal zone was not acquired as provided in this Act, by treaty with the Republic of Columbia. Wilson v. Shaw, (1907) 204 U. S. 24, 27 S. Ct. 233, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 351.

SEAMEN.

Vol. VI, p. 848, sec. 4504.

Master as shipping commissioner.—The master of a vessel making a coastwise voyage between Atlantic ports of the United States may act as shipping commissioner for the purpose of signing his own crew, and the contract so signed is valid and binding. The William H. Clifford, (1908) 165 Fed. 59.

Vol. VI, p. 853, sec. 4511.

Filling in blanks.—It is not competent for the master to fill up blank spaces in the shipping articles, so as to bind the seaman, as such articles constitute a contract for wages. The Bark Shetland v. Johnson, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 416.

Wages.—A provision in shipping articles that "the crew shall make no claim for wages or provisions while the vessel is detained by ice, prior to departure," is not in violation of this section, and is reasonable and valid. The Joseph B. Thomas, (1905) 136 Fed. 693. See also The Lillian, (1904) 131 Fed. 375.

Parol evidence.—A shipowner, when sued by members of the crew for damages resulting from a deviation from the voyage specified in the articles, cannot be permitted to show by parol evidence that the members of the crew were informed that the nature of the intended voyage was materially different from that stated, and that they assented to the deviation at the time of their engagement.

Turtle v. Northwestern Steamship Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 146, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 256.

Vol. VI, p. 859, sec. 4520.

Necessity of shipping articles.—Where the mate of a vessel of more than fifty tons burden, engaged in the coasting trade, had general authority to hire seamen, and engaged libelants to serve as members of the crew on a certain voyage, without making any agreement with them with respect to their wages, and they were received on board by the mate as members of the crew, and treated as such while at an intermediate port, without having ever assented to any contract to work for their passage without other compensation, it was the duty of the master to require libelants to sign shipping articles for the voyage before carrying them to sea, as required by this section; and hence such libelants were entitled to recover the highest rate of wages paid at the port of departure for the time of their actual service, as provided by R. S. secs. 4521, 4523. The Elihu Thompson, (1905) 139 Fed. 89.

A contract for service on a British ship made in an American port, by which the seaman was paid wages in advance, in violation of Act Dec. 21, 1898 (30 Stat. L. 755, 763, ch. 28), is void, and the seaman may leave the service at any time, and recover full wages for the time served, without deduction on account of the advance. Kenney v. Blake, (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 672, affirming (1902) 117 Fed. 557.

The advance payment of wages to a seaman, in violation of Act Dec. 21, 1898, ch. 28, sec. 24, 30 Stat. L. 763, does not render the contract for service made by the shipping articles void, under this section, where it is not shown that the unlawful payment entered into the contract as one of the things agreed on by the parties. The Bound Brook, (1906) 146 Fed. 160. See also The Alnwick, (1904) 132 Fed. 117.

Vol. VI, p. 864, sec. 4527.

Pay on wrongful discharge.—By analogy to this section a court of admiralty may, when equitable, award a seaman wrongfully discharged an additional month's wages, although he served more than a month, and is not therefore within the terms of the statute. Caffyn v. Peabody, (1906) 149 Fed. 294.

Libelants signed as seamen for a voyage on a vessel then ready to sail from the port of Philadelphia, but detained by ice; the shipping articles containing a provision that they should make no claim for wages or provisions while the vessel was so detained. They went on board, and were furnished light work, and given their provisions for a few days, and were then sent on shore by the master, but were told to be in readiness to come back whenever the vessel should be able to get away. When that time came, a week later, they either could not be found or refused to go. It was held that they were not discharged, and were not entitled to wages for the time they were on board, nor to extra pay, under this section, as upon a wrongful discharge. The Joseph B. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 762, affirming (1905) 136 Fed. 693.

Seamen in coastwise trade.—This section does not apply to seamen in the coastwise trade not signed before a shipping commissioner. The George B. Ferguson, (1905) 140 Fed. 955.

Purpose of section.—This section must be considered as intended to secure justice, and not to penalize vessels for mere errors of judgment on the part of their masters, and should not be applied in a case where seamen left their ship on account of a matter as to which there was reasonable ground for controversy, which constituted sufficient cause for litigating their right to recover wages. The Amazon, (1906) 144 Fed. 153.

"Without sufficient cause."—Where there was fair ground for claiming the right to reduce the wages of a mate because of neglect of duty, the refusal to pay him the agreed wages in full on his discharge was not "without sufficient cause," so as to subject the master or owner to the penalty imposed by this section. The Sadie C. Sumner, (1905) 142 Fed. 611.

Leaving service without consent.—Libelants were hired as deck hands on a steamer making daily trips between New York and another port, at thirty dollars per month, and after working six days left the service without the consent of the master. It was held that the refusal of the owner to pay them wages for the time they worked did not subject him to the penalty imposed by this section, for refusing and neglecting to pay seamen's wages when due without sufficient cause, there being reasonable ground, at least, for the owner's claim that libelants' contract was one from month to month, and that they had no right to abandon the service before the end of the month. The Express, (1904) 129 Fed. 655.

Effect of fine. — Where a sailor was fined a portion of his wages for disobedience of orders, as authorized by this section, but the master of the ship did not make an entry of the offense in the ship's log-book on the day the offense was committed, as required by section 4597, such fine was no defense to an action by the sailor against the ship to recover the same as wages. The St. Paul (1904) 133 Fed. 1002.

Discharge. — Where seamen were discharged, and payment of wages refused, it was held that they were entitled to libel the vessel at once therefor, without instituting proceedings under sections 4546, 4547. The Elihu Thompson, (1905) 139 Fed. 89.

Vol. VI, p. 871, sec. 10.

Advance payment. — Evidence considered, and held to show that the voyage for which a libellant signed as a seaman was to terminate in a foreign port, and that he was therefore rightfully discharged in such port, but that he was entitled to recover a sum deducted from his wages on account of an advance payment made by the master when libellant signed in an American port, in violation of this act. The August Belmont, (1907) 153 Fed. 639.

Libellant, a citizen of the United States, signed as a seaman on a German vessel before the German consul at the port of New York for a voyage to Japan, and was paid a month's wages in advance, in violation of this act. When the vessel reached a Pacific port of the United States, he left it without the consent of the master, and brought suit in a court of admiralty to recover his wages for the time served. It was held that the court had jurisdiction, since, having been signed in violation of the statute, the contract was void, and he never became legally a member of the crew; that for the same reason he had the right to leave the vessel at any time, and was entitled, under such statute, to recover wages for the full time served, without deduction on account of the advance payment. The Neck, (1905) 138 Fed. 144.

This section is applicable to a case of the shipment of seamen on a British vessel in an American port; and by virtue of R. S. sec. 4523, such seamen, to whom an advance was made on signing the articles, may leave the service at any time, and recover wages for the time served, and their right is not affected by their waiver of any claim to recover the sums advanced. The Alnwick, (1904) 132 Fed. 117.

Paying seamen's debt. — The fact that the master of a vessel took possession of notes given by seamen to a boarding house keeper after the signing of shipping articles, and held the same with the intention of paying them on the discharge of the seamen, if on inquiry it was found to be legal, does not constitute a violation of this section, nor render the shipment void so as to entitle the seamen to quit the service before the expiration of the term of service under R. S. sec. 4523, where the amount was not charged to the seamen nor any agreement made to pay the notes. The Albani, (1909) 169 Fed. 220.

This section is applicable as well to seamen operating on coastwise vessels as on merchant vessels generally, and hence it is no answer to a libel in admiralty, against a tug engaged in the coasting trade for a seaman's wages earned thereon, that the wages have been attached by garnishment. The Amelia, (1910) 183 Fed. 899.

Seamen's wages are protected from seizure after judgment by attachment or proceedings in aid of execution by the provisions of this section. Wilder v. Inter-Island Steam Nav. Co., (1908) 211 U. S. 239, 29 S. Ct. 58, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 164.

The purpose of this section is to protect seamen; and a seaman will not be held to have assumed the risk from unseaworthy vessels so as to preclude a recovery from the vessel or owner for an injury resulting therefrom, but the vessel by going to sea in violation of the statute assumes all risks which may result therefrom. The Fullerton, (C. C. A. 1908) 167 Fed. 1.

Vol. VI, p. 898, sec. 4573.

Compliance with statute presumed.—Where in a proceeding by seamen against a vessel for wages, the men claim their wages from a date prior to the sailing date, on the ground that they were told to be on board by such date, while on behalf of the vessel it is testified they were told to be in readiness to go on board when notified, and their wages would begin on the day of sailing, and it is conceded that the vessel cleared at the custom house, but failed to sail for some time, owing to ice in port, it will be assumed that the master furnished the collector of customs with a list of the crew before his vessel cleared, as required by this section; and, as the vessel could not clear unless a crew had been secured, this fact will be held to corroborate the seamen that they were due to go on board about the date of clearance, and it will not be presumed that they were thereafter to be kept waiting indefinitely to suit the convenience of the master. The Bark Shetland v. Johnson, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 416.

Punishment.—Where a seaman was guilty of misconduct in leaving a vessel without permission and in refusing to work the cargo as he agreed in his shipping articles, and such offenses and fines therefor were duly entered in the logbook against him as required by this section, such fines might be properly deducted from his pay. The Charles K. Schull, (1909) 166 Fed. 374.

Libelants signed as seamen for a whaling voyage; the articles providing that they should do their duty and obey the lawful commands of the officers while cruising or in port, and that they should not go out of the vessel without leave from the captain or commanding officer. While in the port of Hakodate, Japan, they were given shore leave by watches, but required to return at a stated time, and each was also given a small sum of money. On one occasion, five of them having failed to return, at the direction of the consular agent further leave was denied until the missing men should be arrested and returned, whereupon the entire crew quit work and refused to do their duty, in which refusal the most of them persisted for seven days. On the fourth day, by direction of the consular agent, they were ironed, and on the sixth, having made threats against the master and the vessel being then at sea, they were handcuffed, placed in the between-decks on chains run between the arms of each man with the ends made fast to the sides of the vessel about four and one-half feet above the deck. At night the chain was lowered, so they could lie on the deck. On the next day they agreed to return to work and were at once released. They were requested to go to work each day, and knew that as soon as they agreed to do so they would be freed. It was held that such action of the master was not in excess of the punishment authorized by this section, but was justified under the circumstances, and that the vessel was not liable in damages therefor. The John and Winthrop, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 380.

This section does not deprive the master of authority in his discretion to impose a milder punishment than that prescribed. The Thrasher, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 258.

The word "punishable" does not mean "must be punished," but "may be punished" as therein provided. The Thrasher, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 258.

Vol. VI, p. 914, sec. 4597.

Applies to coasting vessels.—The provisions of this section, which authorize a court to refuse to receive evidence of offenses by seamen not entered in the official log as therein required, are applicable to vessels in the coasting trade. The Amazon, (1906) 144 Fed. 153.

Where a fine had been imposed on a seaman for disobedience, but the same was unavailable as a defense to an action for wages for failure of the ship's master to enter the offense in the ship's logbook on the day it occurred, it was held that the ship was justified in contesting its liability, and was therefore not liable to a fine for unreasonable delay in payment of the seaman's wages. The St. Paul, (1904) 133 Fed. 1002.

Hearing other evidence.—A deduction from the wages of a mate on a small schooner for time lost by reason of drunkenness was held to be justified, although no entries of the occurrence were made in the log, as required by this section, the court exercising the discretion given it by said section to receive other evidence. The Marjory Brown, (1905) 134 Fed. 999.

Vol. VI, p. 930, sec. 4612.

Horsemen, signed for service on a vessel in caring for horses during a voyage, are "seamen," for the purpose of determining the application to them of the Immigration Acts. U. S. v. Atlantic Transport Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 42.

SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION.

Vol. VII, p. 16, sec. 4141.

"Home port."—The meaning of the word "port" in this section was changed by Act Cong. June 26, 1884, ch. 121, 32 Stat. L. 58, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 36, which provides that the word "port" as used in sections 4178 and 4334, in reference to painting the name and port of registered vessels on their sterns, shall be construed to mean either the port where the vessel is registered or the place in the same district where the vessel was built or where one or more of the owners reside. Com. v. Ayer, etc., Tie Co., (1903) 117 Ky. 171, 79 S. W. 290.

Vol. VII, p. 21, sec. 4153.

Computation of tonnage.—The superstructure of an inclosed cabin on a gasoline boat, which cabin extends from the bottom of the boat above the deck, having windows in the superstructure, but which adds nothing to the carrying capacity of the boat in either passengers or cargo, is not "a closed-in space . . . available for cargo or stores, or for the berthing or accommodation of passengers or

State taxation.—Vessels which, though engaged in interstate commerce, are employed in such commerce wholly within the limits of a state, are subject to taxation in that state, although they may have been registered or enrolled under R. S. secs. 4141, 4311, at a port outside the limits of the state. Old Dominion Steamship Co. v. Virginia, (1905) 198 U. S. 299, 25 S. Ct. 686, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1059. See also *Olson v. crew," which under this section is to be added to the space below deck in computing the vessel's tonnage, and where without it the boat is not over fifteen tons burden she is not subject to inspection, etc., under the provisions of R. S. sec. 4426, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 173. The Messenger, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 908.

Vol. VII, p. 36, sec. 21.

Situs of vessel for taxation.—The settled rule that the domicile of the owner or the actual situs of the vessel, and not the place of enrolment of a vessel plying between the ports of different states, engaged in the coast-wise trade, and the consequent marking of the stern of the vessel with the name of the place of enrolment, as provided for in R. S. secs. 4178, 4334, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 36, 64, was the criterion by which to determine the situs of the vessel for taxation, was not changed by the declaration of this section that the word "port," as used in those sections, shall be construed to mean either the port where the vessel is enrolled or the place where it was built or where one of the owners resides, which simply enables the owner to select a place other than the port of enrolment to be marked upon the vessel. Ayer, etc., Tie Co. v. Kentucky, (1906) 202 U. S. 409, 26 S. Ct. 679, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1082.

Distribution of proceeds of vessel.—While R. S. secs. 4192, 4193, providing for the recording of mortgages, etc., on vessels, do not make such recorded mortgages maritime liens enforceable in a court of admiralty, yet where such court has in its registry for distribution a fund arising from the sale of a vessel, and the maritime liens have been paid, the holder of a recorded mortgage may prove his claim against the fund, and is entitled to payment therefrom in the order of his priority. The Gordon Campbell, (1904) 131 Fed. 963.

Effect of unrecorded bill of sale on statutory lien.—Under this section it was held that a bill of sale of a vessel of New Jersey to a resident of New York not so recorded was invalid to defeat a lien for supplies furnished the vessel in New Jersey, by one having no actual knowledge of the sale, under the New Jersey statute giving a lien on domestic vessels. Hitchings v. Olsen, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 305.

Effect of state laws.—The recording of a mortgage on a vessel of the United States, under this section, in the office of the collector of customs where such vessel is registered renders the mortgage valid, regardless of the fact that it is not recorded as required by the state law. Fleming v. Philadelphia F. Assoc., (1907) 147 Mich. 404, 110 N. W. 933.

"Haven."—Waters inclosed in whole or in part by a breakwater or other artificial structures to afford a protected anchorage, as well as those so inclosed by natural land, constitute a "haven" within this section, making certain acts offenses against the United States when committed "upon the high seas, or in any arm of the sea, or in any river, haven, creek, basin, or bay within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular state." Ex p. O'Hare, (1910) 179 Fed. 662, 103 C. C. A. 220, reversing (1909) 171 Fed. 290.

Taxation of right of possession of mining claim.—Lands of the United States are not taxed in violation of this section by the imposition, under the authority of a Colorado statute (Laws 1887, pp. 340, 341), of a tax upon the right of possession, for mining purposes, of a lode mining claim, and the enforcement of the collection of such tax by a sale of such right of possession. Elder v. Wood, (1908) 208 U. S. 226, 28 S. Ct. 263, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 464.

1909 Supp., p. 632, sec. 1.

Binding force of limitations in enabling act.—Since Congress has no power to admit a state into the Union except on an equal footing with the original states in accordance with the rights, powers, and duties defined by the Constitution, the admission of Oklahoma fixed her status and that of her people as that acquired by the other states of the federal Union, under the Constitution, anything in the enabling act to the contrary notwithstanding, and conferred on such state the exclusive power to enact its own laws, regulating intrastate commerce, and in the exercise of its police power regulating the introduction and sale of intoxicating liquors. U. S. v. U. S. Express Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 1006.

A condition in the enabling act for the admission of Oklahoma into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, that the capital of the state should temporarily be at the city of Guthrie, and should not be changed therefrom previous to 1913, although accepted by an irrevocable ordinance, ceased to be a valid limitation upon the power of the state after its admission and cannot override any subsequent repugnant state legislation. Coyle v. Smith, (1911) 221 U. S. 559, 31 S. Ct. 688, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 853, affirming 28 Okla. 121, 113 Pac. 944.

For an exhaustive examination of the authorities on the question as to whether the provisions of an enabling act are binding on a state after admission to the Union, see Coyle v. Smith, (1911) 28 Okla. 121, 113 Pac. 945; Smith v. State, (1911) 28 Okla. 235, 113 Pac. 932.

1909 Supp., p. 634, sec. 3.

Construction.—The authority conferred by the Act enabling the people of Oklahoma and Indian Territory to form a constitution, which provides that the delegates to the constitutional convention shall adopt the Federal Constitution, and shall form a state constitution which shall be republican in form, and which shall make no distinction in civil and political rights on account of race or color, and which shall not be repugnant to the Federal Constitution, is a working rule, addressed to the delegates forming a constitutional convention, and where a constitution formed by the convention has been declared by the President of the United States as authorized by the enabling act, the obligations of the character indicated imposed by the enabling act cease, and individuals may not invoke the act as a prohibition against state legislation, though the enabling act also requires that the constitutional convention shall accept its terms and adopt an ordinance to that effect. McCabe v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 966.

Qualification of voters.—An amendment to the constitution of Oklahoma provides: "No person shall be registered as an elector of this state, or be allowed to vote in any election herein, unless he be able to read and write any section of the constitution of the state of Oklahoma; but no person who was on Jan. 1, 1866, or at any time prior thereto entitled to vote under any form of government, or who at that time resided in some foreign nation, and no lineal descendant of such person shall be denied the right to register and vote because of his inability to so read and write sections of such constitution. Precinct election inspectors having in charge the registration of electors shall enforce the provisions of this section at the time of registration, provided registration be required. Should registration be dispensed with, the provisions of this section shall be enforced by the precinct election officers when electors apply for ballot to vote." It has been held that this provision is not invalid on account of the provision in the enabling Act that the constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, and shall not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of independence. Atwater v. Hassett, (1910) 27 Okla. 292, 111 Pac. 802.

Effect of admission on congressional legislation.—Upon the admission of Oklahoma into the Union under this Act "on an equal footing with the original states," the congressional requirement that the Kansas rates should be the test of the rates which the Southern Kansas Railway Company might charge the inhabitants of the Indian Territory, made by the Act of Congress of July 4, 1884, 23 Stat. L. 73, ch. 179, reserving to Congress the right to regulate rates until a state government should exist, when that government should possess the right of regulation, ceased to be of any force, and the whole subject of domestic rates passed under the control of the state. Oklahoma v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 277, 31 S. Ct. 434, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 465.

For another case under this section, see Farrar v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1910) 149 Mo. App. 188, 130 S. W. 373.

1909 Supp., p. 637, sec. 7.

Expenses of loaning and investing school funds.—Under the provisions of the enabling act, the state of Oklahoma is not prohibited from using any of the interest derived from the $5,000,000 donated to the state for the use and benefit of the common schools in lieu of sections 16 and 36 and other lands of the Indian Territory, or the income from the permanent school fund as constituted by section 2 of article 11 of the constitution, to pay the expenses of the loaning and investing of the same. Betts v. Land Office Com'rs, (1910) 27 Okla. 64, 110 Pac. 766.

1909 Supp., p. 638, sec. 8.

Paying expenses of sale and leasing.—Under this section the state of Oklahoma is not prohibited from using a part of the proceeds of the sale of the lands granted by the federal government to the state of Oklahoma for the State University Preparatory School, Normal School, the Agricultural and Mechanical School, and the Colored Agricultural and Normal University, penal institutions, and public buildings, and for the support of the common schools, or rentals therefrom to pay the expenses of the sale or leasing thereof. Betts v. Land Office Com'rs, (1910) 27 Okla. 64, 110 Pac. 766.

1909 Supp., p. 639, sec. 10.

Employees. — The commissioners of the Land Office, under rules and regulations continued in force in the state of Oklahoma by virtue of this section of the enabling act, until the legislature of the state prescribes rules and regulations, are authorized to determine the number of employees necessary for the leasing of the public lands, fix their salaries, and pay them or cause them to be paid out of the rentals derived therefrom, together with the expenses incident to such leasing, without an appropriation made as required by section 55 of article 5 of the constitution of Oklahoma. Betts v. Land Office Com'rs, (1910) 27 Okla. 64, 110 Pac. 766.

Service of process on foreign corporations. — A section of an Oklahoma statute (section 1227, Wilson Rev. & Ann. Stat. 1903), providing that any action to which a foreign corporation may be the party defendant may be brought in the county where its designated agent resides or in any county in which the business, or any part of it out of which the action arose, is transacted, service upon such agent shall be taken and held as due service upon such corporation, not being in conflict with this section requiring that all actions shall be instituted in the county which the defendants or either of them reside or may be found, is valid. Nelson v. Deming Invest. Co., (1908) 21 Okla. 610, 96 Pac. 742.

Conditional sales. — Wilson's Rev. & Ann. Stat. Okla. 1903, sec. 4179, declared that conditional sale contracts should be invalid against innocent purchasers or creditors of the buyer unless registered in the county where the property was kept. The enabling act provides that the laws of Oklahoma territory shall apply to the state of Oklahoma until changed by the legislature, but that no existing rights or contracts shall be affected by the change, but shall continue as if no change in the form of government had taken place. It has been held that a contract of conditional sale of property in the territory prior to statehood being valid without registration, the seller, on the territory becoming a state, was not required to register it in order to enforce it in subsequent bankruptcy proceedings against the buyer. In re Gray, (1908) 170 Fed. 638.

Construction. — Crimes and offenses committed before and after the admission of Oklahoma into the Union, and not those committed before and after the passage of the enabling act, must be deemed meant by the provision of this section for the transfer of jurisdiction in respect of all crimes against the United States to the federal court therein provided, since otherwise there would be an indefinite period between the date of the enabling act and the admission of the state, during which such crimes might go unpunished. Pickett v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 456, 30 S. Ct. 265, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 566.

District of trial. — The fact that the organic act of the territory of Oklahoma required criminal offenses to be tried in the county where committed does not render the provision of the enabling act of the state transferring jurisdiction of offenses against the United States to the District Court for the appropriate district invalid as an ex post facto law with respect to offenses previously committed, and such District Court has jurisdiction to indict and try a person for such an offense, although not held in the county where it was committed. Hallock v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 417.

Prosecution for murder. — The murder of one negro by another within the limits of the Osage Indian reservation subsequent to the Oklahoma enabling act, but prior to the admission of that state into the Union, was justifiable, after such admission, in the District Court of the United States for the western district of Oklahoma, under this section of that act, providing for the transfer of jurisdiction in respect of all crimes against the United States to the federal courts therein provided. Pickett v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 456, 30 S. Ct. 265, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 566.

District of trial. — The United States Constitution, art. 3, sec. 2, provides that, when crimes are not committed within any state, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed, and the Oklahoma amended enabling act provides that pending prosecutions for offenses theretofore committed in territorial times shall be transferred and thereafter conducted in the Circuit or District Court for the district in which they were committed. It has been held that the creation of judicial districts by the new state on its admission into the Union was intended to supersede the old territorial subdivisions, and to supersede for jurisdictional purposes the new districts for the old territorial counties and enlarge the area of jurisdiction accordingly, so that an offender, having been indicted for an offense committed within the western district of Oklahoma, was only entitled to a trial within that district, and not within the county in which the offense was committed. Billingsley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 653.

Procedure in Circuit Court after admission of state.—Where an appeal was taken from a judgment of dismissal to the Supreme Court of the territory of Oklahoma, and the appeal, being undetermined on the admission of the state, was thereafter transferred to a federal Circuit Court, which by this section was vested with the powers of such Supreme Court, it was held that the judgment should be affirmed by the Circuit Court, if it should have been affirmed by the Supreme Court under the territorial Code of Procedure. Young v. U. S., (1910) 176 Fed. 612.

1909 Supp., p. 644, sec. 19.

Provisions self-executing.—This section and the following section in connection with section 497 of the Oklahoma constitution, are self-executing, and together transferred all cases pending in all courts of original jurisdiction in Oklahoma Territory and in Indian Territory to similar courts of original jurisdiction of the state. Reeves v. Territory, (1909) 2 Okla. Crim. 351, 101 Pac. 1039.

Guardianship proceedings.—A guardianship proceeding pending in one of the United States courts of the Indian Territory at the time of admission of the state was, by this section of the enabling act and section 23 of the schedule of the constitution of Oklahoma, transferred to the County Court of the county in which was located the court in which the case was pending. Eaves v. Mullen, (1910) 25 Okla. 679, 107 Pac. 433.

Petition for allotment of dower.—A proceeding pending on petition for the allotment of dower in personalty belonging to an estate in course of administration in one of the United States courts in Indian Territory, sitting in probate at the time of admission of the state into the Union, was, by this section of the enabling act, and section 23 of the schedule of the constitution of Oklahoma, transferred to the County Court of the county in which was located the court in which said case was pending. Burdett v. Burdett, (1910) 26 Okla. 416, 109 Pac. 922.

1909 Supp., p. 645, sec. 20.

Number of challenges.—In the Indian Territory a defendant charged with a felony was allowed to challenge twenty jurors peremptorily; and under section 28 of the schedule of the Oklahoma constitution, accepting the terms of an amendment to the enabling act, section 20, providing that all criminal cases pending in the Indian Territory not transferred to the federal courts should be proceeded with in the state courts under the laws then in force in the Indian Territory, it was held that a defendant tried in the state court for a felony committed in the Indian Territory before statehood was entitled to twenty peremptory challenges, and that it was error for the court to restrict him to five. Harris v. U. S., (1910) 4 Okla. Crim. 317, 111 Pac. 982.

Pending in United States court.—A homicide cause, the venue of which had been changed conformably to the Act of June 28, 1898, 30 Stat. L. 511, ch. 517, sec. 29, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 460, because of the Indian citizenship of the accused, from the United States court in the Indian Territory to the federal District Court at Paris, Texas, was not pending in the United States in the Indian Territory, within the meaning of the provisions of this section of the Oklahoma enabling act as amended for the transfer to the Oklahoma courts of all cases pending in the United States courts of Oklahoma and Indian territories, not transferred to the United States Circuit or District Courts in the state of Oklahoma. Hendrix v. U. S., (1911) 219 U. S. 79, 31 S. Ct. 193, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 102.

STATUTES.

Vol. VII, p. 134, sec. 3.

Coal barges.—Under this section providing that the word "vessel" includes every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water, barges used for the transportation of coal on an inland river were held to be "vessels," within

R. S. secs. 4141, 4192, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 16, 42, providing for the registration thereof, and requiring bills of sale and mortgages thereon to be recorded in the office of the surveyor at the home port. Arnold v. Eastin, (1903) 116 Ky. 686, 76 S. W. 855.

Vol. VII, p. 136, sec. 13.

Construction.—This section which provides that "the repeal of any statute shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such statute, unless the repealing act shall so expressly provide, and such statute shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of such penalty, forfeiture, or liability," was not an attempt to limit the power of succeeding Congresses; but it merely prescribes a rule of construction, binding upon the courts, as a substitute for the common-law rule with respect to the effect of a repealing statute as a release from penalties and prosecutions for offenses committed under the statute repealed, and under it the repeal of a penal statute extinguishes no penalties previously incurred thereunder, in the absence of an express extinguishing clause in the repealing act. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1907) 148 Fed. 719; U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 84; Great Northern R. Co. v. U. S., (1907) 155 Fed. 945, 84 C. C. A. 93, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 452, 28 S. Ct. 313, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 567.

conflicting laws, which is made by the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906, 34 Stat. L. 584, ch. 3591, sec. 10, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 275, in favor of causes pending in the federal courts, which "shall be prosecuted to conclusion in the manner heretofore provided by law," was addressed solely to the procedure to be followed in pending cases, and such section, therefore, did not supersede the general provision of R. S. sec. 13, saving existing forfeitures, penalties, or liabilities from repeal, so as to prevent future criminal prosecutions for offenses against the Elkins Act of Feb. 19, 1903, 32 Stat. L. 847, ch. 708, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 170, committed prior to the adoption of the latter statute. Great Northern R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 208 U. S. 452, 28 S. Ct. 313, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 567, affirmed (1907) 155 Fed. 945, 84 C. C. A. 93.

Applied.—This section was applied in Hertz v. Woodman, (1910) 218 U. S. 205, 30 S. Ct. 621, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1001; U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1907) 148 Fed. 719; U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 84, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 835; U. S. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 269; Burton v. Frank A. Seifert Plastic Relief Co., (1908) 108 Va. 338, 61 S. E. 933.

Reference to acts not included.—To the same effect as the original note, see People's U. S. Bank v. Goodwin, (1908) 162 Fed. 937.

STEAM VESSELS.

Vol. VII, p. 161, sec. 4400.

Vessels on waters entirely within a state.—All vessels carrying passengers within the jurisdiction of the United States are subject to regulations prescribed by Congress, even if the waters navigated are entirely within a state. The Scow No. 1, (1909) 169 Fed. 717.

Vol. VII, p. 162, sec. 4401.

Under this section, see The Queen, (C. C. A. 1910) 186 Fed. 725.

Vol. VII, p. 164, sec. 4405.

Regulations.—Regulations to guard against collision established by the board of supervising inspectors under authority of this section, have the force of laws; but they are only valid and obligatory in so far as they are not inconsistent with statutory regulations. The Aurelia, (1910) 183 Fed. 341.

Fire drills.—Inspectors' rule 5, sec. 15, requiring masters of steam vessels to keep the fire apparatus thereon in complete working order, and to post station bills and exercise the crew in their duties in connection therewith, is within the power conferred on the board by this section and valid. It does not purport to create offenses, but merely to prescribe duties, but a breach of it, resulting from a master's misconduct, negligence, or inattention, causing death, is manslaughter because so provided by Congress in R. S. sec. 5344, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 235. U. S. v. Van Schaick, (1904) 134 Fed. 592.

Vol. VII, p. 174. [Regulations as to motor boats.]

Steam vessels employed in inland navigation.—The provisions of this Act apply to vessels propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, or electric motors, and do not relate to steam vessels employed in inland navigation. Beck v. Johnson, (1908) 169 Fed. 154.

Forfeiture.—This Act which makes all vessels of above fifteen tons burden carrying freight or passengers for hire, propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, or electric motors, subject to the provisions of certain enumerated sections of the Revised Statutes relating to river navigation and to inspection and employment of engineers and pilots by steam vessels, does not have the effect of extending to such vessels the provisions of section 4499, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 197, imposing penalties upon "any vessel propelled in whole or in part by steam," which shall be navigated without complying with the terms of such title, and such a vessel is not subject to seizure and forfeiture thereunder. The Ben R., (1904) 134 Fed. 784, 67 C. C. A. 290.

Computation of tonnage.—The superstructure of an inclosed cabin on a gasoline boat, which cabin extends from the bottom of the boat above the deck, having windows in the superstructure, but which adds nothing to the carrying capacity of the boat in either passengers or cargo, is not a "closed-in space . . . available for cargo or stores or for the berthing or accommodation of passengers or crew," which under R. S. sec. 4153, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 21, is to be added to the space below deck in computing the vessel's tonnage, and where without it the boat is not over fifteen tons burden she is not subject to inspection, etc., under the provisions of this Act. The Messenger, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 908.

Competency.—To the same effect as the original note. Northern Commercial Co. v. Lindblom, (1908) 162 Fed. 250, 89 C. C. A. 230.

Vol. VII, p. 184, sec. 4465.

Discretion of court.—A court of admiralty may, in exercise of a judicial discretion, refuse to impose on the owner of a steamship the penalty prescribed by this section for carrying more passengers than the number allowed by the vessel's inspection certificate, where, because of extraordinary conditions existing, such imposition would be equitable. Thus in The Charles Nelson, (1906) 149 Fed. 846, it was held that a steamship which left San Francisco for Seattle a few days after the destruction of the former city by earthquake and fire was not subject to the penalty prescribed by this section for carrying more steerage passengers than the number allowed by her inspection certificate, nor liable to such passengers in damages for the inconvenience and privation resulting to them from the overcrowding and from a shortage of water, where the excess of passengers was due to the confusion caused by the destruction of the city and company's office, and occurred notwithstanding its efforts to prevent it, and the shortage was due to the company's inability to procure water or sufficient coal for its condenser in San Francisco, and to bad weather which prolonged the voyage.

Duty of master.—This section provides for the maintenance of a steam fire pump and two hand pumps with pipes, one on each side of the vessel, to convey water to the upper decks to which suitable hose shall be attached and kept in good order at all times and ready for immediate use. United States inspectors' rule 5, sec. 15, provides for a fire drill at least once a week. It has been held that it is the statutory duty of the captain to maintain an efficient fire drill, and to see that the proper apparatus for extinguishing fire is provided and maintained in proper order. Van Schaick v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 847, 14 Ann. Cas. 456.

Automobiles.—This section originally prohibited passenger steamers from carrying as freight certain articles, including petroleum products or other like explosive fluids, except in certain cases and under certain restrictions. By Act Feb. 20, 1901, ch. 386, 31 Stat. L. 799, the section was amended by adding the following provision: "Nothing in the foregoing or following sections of this Act shall prohibit the transportation by steam vessels of gasoline or any of the products of petroleum when carried by motor vehicles (commonly known as automobiles) using the same as a source of motive power: Provided, however, that all fire, if any, in such vehicles or automobiles be extinguished before entering the said vessel, and that the same be not relighted until after said vehicle shall have left the same . . ." It was held that gasoline contained in the tank of an automobile being transported on a steam vessel was carried as freight within the meaning of the statute; that an automobile in which the motive power was generated by passing an electric spark through a compressed mixture of gasoline and air in the cylinder, causing intermittent explosions, carried a fire while the vehicle was under motion from its own motive power; and that the carrying by a steam ferryboat of such a vehicle, which was run on and off the boat under its own power, was a violation of the statute. The Texas, (1905) 134 Fed. 909.

A subsequent amendment to this section

Vol. VII, p. 189, sec. 4475.

Construction and scope.—This and the following section relating to the packing for shipment, shipment, or delivery to a vessel as stores of gunpowder or other dangerous substances, were enacted in the exercise by Congress of its constitutional power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, and are applicable only to shipments or intended shipments on vessels engaged in such commerce. U. S. v. Giordani, (1908) 163 Fed. 773.

Foreign private steam vessels carrying passengers from ports of United States.—This section applies to shipments on foreign private steam vessels carrying passengers avoids the effect of this decision. See 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 396.

A steam ferryboat carrying passengers is a "steamer," and subject to the provisions of this section which prohibits any steamer carrying passengers from carrying certain dangerous articles as freight or stores. The Nassau, (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 46, reversing (1910) 182 Fed. 696.

from ports of the United States to any other place or country. U. S. v. Giordani, (1908) 163 Fed. 772.

Metallic cartridges.—The provisions of this and the following section relating to the packing and shipment of gunpowder include within their meaning metallic cartridges containing gunpowder. U. S. v. Giordani, (1908) 163 Fed. 772.

Civil suit.—No civil suit can be maintained in consequence of violation of R. S. secs. 4475, 4476, without a proper and specific pleading of facts which show negligence or wilful tort. Wyman v. Boston Blacking Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 834.

Vol. VII, p. 191, sec. 4482.

It is the statutory duty of the captain to exercise ordinary care to see that the life preservers are in fit condition for use. Van Schaick v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 847, 14 Ann. Cas. 456.

Vol. VII, p. 192, sec. 4488.

The sufficiency of the equipment of a vessel with lifeboats, life rafts, and boat disengaging apparatus is to be measured by the regulations adopted pursuant to this section by the board of supervising inspectors, which regulations, under R. S. sec. 4405, 7 Fed.

Stat. Annot. 164, when approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, "have the force of law." Deslions v. La Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

Vol. VII, p. 194, sec. 4492.

Scow furnished without charge except for expenses.—Where a scow temporarily equipped for the purpose and in tow of a tug carried a picnic party of 350 persons without being provided with life-preservers as required by the regulations of the board of supervising inspectors, adopted pursuant to this section, she was not relieved from liability for the penalty thereby provided by the fact that she was furnished to the party without charge except for expenses. The Scow No. 1, (1909) 169 Fed. 717.

Vol. VII, p. 197, sec. 4499.

Appeal.—A proceeding in rem by the United States against a vessel under this section, for the enforcement of a penalty for violation of a statutory provision, is one in admiralty, and not a criminal proceeding, and a decree dismissing the libel is appealable. The Ben R., (1904) 134 Fed. 784, 67 C. C. A. 290.

1909 Supp., p. 655, sec. 14.

Liability of tows.—The regulations established by the Department of Commerce and Labor, under authority of this section, limiting the length of tows and of hawsers between vessels in tows in inland waters, and prescribing penalties to be imposed on the master of a towing vessel wilfully violating such regulations, while binding on tows, are not binding on the vessels in a tow acting in obedience to the orders of the master of the tug, and they cannot be held in fault for a collision between one of their number and another vessel, on the ground alone that, following such orders, they had lengthened their hawsers beyond the prescribed limit, at a place not within the rule, and could not shorten them after reaching waters within the rule. The Manhattan, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 329, reversing (1910) 181 Fed. 229.

SURETY COMPANIES.

Vol. VII, p. 200, sec. 1.

Not different from bond of individual.— A bail bond given by a surety company for the appearance of a defendant in a criminal case in a federal court, as authorized by this Act, differs in no way, so far as its legal status is concerned, from the bond of an individual surety. Ex p. Marrin, (1908) 164 Fed. 631.

Vol. VII, p. 202, sec. 5.

Jurisdiction.— The United States is the real, and not merely the nominal, plaintiff, so as to sustain the original jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, without regard to the amount in dispute, in a suit authorized by this section, to be brought in its name, for the use and benefit of a materialman upon the bond of a contractor for a public work, which the statute requires shall contain the specific, special obligation directly to the United States that the contractor shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him labor and materials in the prosecution of the work. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 204 U. S. 349, 27 S. Ct. 381, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 516, affirming (1904) 132 Fed. 82.

District of suit.— This Act authorizing suits by contractors for public work on the contractor's bond given to the United States, declares (section 5) that any surety company, surety on such a bond, may be sued in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of actions or suits on such bonds in the district in which the bond was made or guaranteed, or in the district in which the principal office of the surety company is located, and for the purposes of the act the bond should be treated as made or guaranteed in the district in which the office is located, to which it is returnable, or in which it is filed, or in the district in which the principal in the bond resided when it was made. It was held that where the contractor's bond for the construction of a dry dock at the navy yard at League Island, Pennsylvania, was executed in New York, was returnable to and filed in Washington, and the principal in the bond was a New York corporation, while the principal office of the surety was in the middle district of Pennsylvania, a suit on the bond was improperly instituted in the eastern district of Pennsylvania. U. S. v. Schofield Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 240.

Waiver as to district of suit.— Conceding that a surety company which has furnished a bond for a contractor for government work is given the privilege of being sued thereon only in the district in which the bond was made, or in that where it has its principal office, by this section which provides that it may be sued in the federal courts in either of such districts, yet a company waives such privilege where it enters appearance, pleads to the merits, and takes depositions before moving to dismiss. U. S. v. California Bridge, etc., Co., (1907) 162 Fed. 559.

TELEGRAPH, TELEPHONE, CABLE, AND ELECTRIC LINES.

Telephone companies not included.— A telephone company is not within this Act, nor can a company doing both a telegraph and telephone business claim its benefit as to the lines used in the telephone business. The fact that such lines may be used for the local delivery of interstate telegraphic messages does not make them an integral part of the telegraph lines, so as to bring them within the purview of the Act. Sunset Telephone, etc., Co. v. Pomona, (1908) 164 Fed. 561.

Grants of exclusive rights by railroads.— A contract between a railroad company and a telegraph company by which the latter is granted the exclusive right of occupancy of the railroad's right of way for the maintenance of a telegraph line is void. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Atlantic Postal Tel. Cable Co., (1907) 162 Fed. 991.

Owner of highway.— This section does not effect the right of an abutting landowner to compensation for the burden imposed upon the fee by the erection of a line upon a rural highway, which is a post road. Cosgriff v. Tri-State Telephone, etc., Co., (1906) 15 N. D. 210, 107 N. W. 525.

State regulation.—This and the following sections authorizing any telegraph company which accepts its provisions to construct and maintain its lines along any military or post roads of the United States "which have been or may hereafter be declared such by law," supplemented by Act March 1, 1884, ch. 9, 23 Stat. L. 3, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 901, which declares that all public roads and highways while kept up and maintained as such are post routes, gives such a telegraph company the right to use any public highway, street, or alley for its lines independent of any action or consent of the state or municipal authorities; but it holds such right subject to the police power of the state and municipality to make and enforce any appropriate and reasonable regulations governing such use. Ganz v. Ohio Postal Tel. Cable Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 692; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Richmond, (1909) 178 Fed. 310.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Superior Ct., (1911) 15 Cal. App. 679, 115 Pac. 1091, 1100, the court said: "From the principles as thus affirmed, these incontrovertible propositions flow: (1) That telegraph corporations that have accepted the restrictions and obligations prescribed as to such corporations by Congress are not primarily beholden to any state for their right to transact a telegraph business therein; that the sole source of their authority to enter any of the states or territories of the United States, where there are military and post roads and government waterways, for the purpose of doing business therein, is in the acts of the federal Congress. (2) That no state has the power, under the indicated circumstances, to exclude such corporations from the right or privilege of carrying on the business for which they are formed within its borders; that, while the state may impose upon such corporations, as it may upon all corporations of whatever kind or nature, organized and existing under the laws of another state, reasonable regulations, and to that end prescribe and require certain reasonable prerequisites to the exercise of the authority conferred on them by Congress to do business in such state, yet no state will be permitted, whether under the guise of regulation or otherwise, to enact any legislation the effect of which would or might practically be to prevent them from doing business in such state, or in effect result in an attempt on the part of such state to regulate commercial intercourse between its citizens and those of other states, or to control the transmission of all telegraphic correspondence within its own jurisdiction. In other words, any state legislation hostile to the right of such foreign telegraph corporations to do business in a state in which they are authorized to do business by Congress would be in direct conflict with the laws of Congress, and therefore void."

Removal of poles and wires.—Under the Ohio statute, which provides that the use of a public road by a telegraph company "shall not incommode the public in the use of such road," a board of county commissioners, which has been given control of a pike by the state, cannot grant to a telegraph company the right to maintain its poles and wires thereon, except subject to such statutory limitation; nor will such a grant preclude it or a succeeding board from ordering a removal of such poles and wires, if at any time through changed conditions their location on the highway shall incommode the public in its use, and such action in ordering a removal will not be interfered with by the court, unless an abuse of discretion is shown. Ganz v. Ohio Postal Tel. Cable Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 692; reversing 137 Fed. 947.

State and municipal license taxes.—An illegal burden on the interstate business of a foreign telegraph company, as well as a tax on its property beyond the jurisdiction of the state, is imposed by the Arkansas statute (Ark. Laws 1907, p. 744), under which such company, as a condition of continuing to do a local business in the state, and of escaping the heavy penalties therein prescribed, must pay a given amount, based on all its capital stock, merely for filing its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state. Ludwig v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1910) 216 U. S. 146, 30 S. Ct. 280, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 423.

The exaction from a foreign telegraph company for the benefit of the permanent school fund, under the authority of the Kansas statute (Kan. Gen. Stat. 1901, p. 280), of a "charter fee" of a given per cent. of its entire authorized capital stock, as a condition of continuing to do local business in the state, is invalid under the commerce and due process of law clauses of the Federal Constitution, as necessarily amounting to a burden and tax on the company's interstate business and on its property located or used outside the state. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas, (1910) 216 U. S. 1, 30 S. Ct. 190, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 355, wherein the court said: "Looking, then, at the natural and reasonable effect of the statute, disregarding mere forms of expression, it is clear that the making of the payment by the telegraph company, as a charter fee, of a given per cent. of its authorized capital, representing, as that capital clearly does, all of its business and property, both within and outside of the state, a condition of its right to do local business in Kansas, is, in its essence, not simply a tax for the privilege of doing local business in the state, but a burden and tax on the company's interstate business and on its property located or used outside of the state. The express words of the statute leave no doubt as to what is the basis on which the fee specified in the state statute rests. That fee, plainly, is not based on such of the company's capital stock as represented in its local business and property in Kansas. The requirement is a given per cent. of the company's authorized capital; that is, all its capital, wherever or however employed, whether in the United States or in foreign countries, and whatever may be the extent of its lines in Kansas as compared with its lines outside of that state."

What part of the fee exacted is to be attributed to the company's domestic business in Kansas and what part to interstate business, the state has not chosen to ascertain and declare in the statute. It strikes at the company's entire business, wherever conducted, and its property, wherever located, and, in terms, makes it a condition of the company's telegraph right to transact purely local business in Kansas that it shall contribute, for the benefit of the state school fund, a given per cent. of its whole authorized capital, representing all of its property and all its business and interests everywhere."

Intrastate business.—A foreign telegraph company accepting the provisions of this section, authorizing any telegraph company to construct and operate lines along post roads, etc., and engaging in business in a state, is subject to a license tax on its intrastate business. Williams v. Talladega, (1909) 164 Ala. 633, 51 So. 330.

Reasonableness.—An ordinance of a city imposing a tax on the privilege of transmitting messages by telegraph between points within the state is valid when applied to a foreign telegraph company which had accepted the provisions of this section, though a part of the business done by the company may consist in the sending of messages for the federal government as authorized by the statute, for, if government messages are transmitted at a reduced rate and it has a material effect on the company's business, the same may be taken into account in passing on the reasonableness of the tax. Williams v. Talladega, (1909) 164 Ala. 633, 51 So. 330.

State taxation.—To the same effect and following the case cited in the first paragraph of the original note. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Trapp, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 114. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lakin, (1909) 53 Wash. 326, 101 Pac. 1094.

Taxation of franchise.—To the same effect as the original note. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wright, (C. C. A. 1910) 185 Fed. 250; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lakin, (1909) 53 Wash. 326, 101 Pac. 1095. Contra, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wright, (1908) 158 Fed. 1004; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Omaha, (1905) 73 Neb. 527, 103 N. W. 84.

Injunctions.—Where a telegraph company sought to condemn a right of way along the right of way of a railroad, and in its proposition stated that the height of its poles above the ground would not exceed the distance from the poles to the end of the nearest cross-ties, the railroad company was not entitled to an injunction restraining the prosecution of such condemnation proceedings because its right of way was already encumbered by a rival telegraph line and that the effect of complainant's line would be to seriously interfere with the railroad's business and would constitute a menace to the safety of its tracks and trains. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Atlantic Postal Tel. Cable Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 991.

Vol. VII, p. 215, sec. 1. [Subsidized railroad and telegraph companies, etc.]

Enforcement of Act.—In a suit by a telegraph company to obtain specific performance of right of way contracts with certain railroads, it was held the defendant was not entitled to object that the contracts were unenforceable because they contained certain provisions in violation of this Act conferring certain rights in subsidized railroad and telegraph lines on the United States, and prohibiting interference therewith, etc. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., (1906) 137 Fed. 435.

TERRITORIAL COURTS.

Vol. VII, p. 231, sec. 1909.

Habeas corpus cases.—A determination by the Supreme Court of the territory of Arizona in a habeas corpus case as to which custodian a child of tender years shall be committed to is not appealable to the Supreme Court of the United States under this section, as a case "involving the question of personal freedom." New York Foundling Hospital v. Gatti, (1906) 203 U. S. 429, 27 S. Ct. 53, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 254.

Time for filing bonds.—R. S. sec. 1007, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 618, provides that to stay process on the judgment, appellant may give security required by law within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment. Section 1012, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 624, makes courts subject to the same rules prescribed by section 1007, and by section 1909 it is provided that appeals from final decisions of the Supreme Court of Arizona shall be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner, and under the same regulations, as from Circuit Courts of the United States. It has been held that appellants from a decision in the Supreme Court of Arizona have sixty days after the judgment was rendered, exclusive of Sundays, to give security and suspend judgment upon an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Sandoval v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1909) 12 Ariz. 348, 100 Pac. 816.

Vol. VII, p. 235, sec. 1927.

Interest included.—Under this section, providing that justices of the peace in Arizona shall not have jurisdiction of any matter where the sum claimed exceeds $300, interest is included in the sum claimed, and hence a territorial law, giving justices jurisdiction in civil actions in which the amount involved, exclusive of interest and costs, does not exceed $300, is invalid in so far as it attempts to exclude interest from the amount in controversy. Brown v. Braun, (1905) 9 Ariz. 254, 80 Pac. 323.

Remitting portion of demand after suit began.—Under this section, limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Arizona to controversies wherein the sum claimed is less than $300, a plaintiff cannot, after the suit has been instituted, remit a portion of his demand, so as to bring it within the jurisdictional limit. Brown v. Braun, (1905) 9 Ariz. 254, 80 Pac. 323.

TERRITORIES.

Vol. VII, p. 251, sec. 1842.

Failure of governor to approve.—Where the journals of the houses of the legislature showed the passage of an Act many days before the day on which the governor sent a message to the legislature stating that he had allowed the Act to become a law by limitation, without showing the day of receipt of the Act by him, the court, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, will assume that the governor acted lawfully, and that his message implied the receipt by him of the Act more than three days prior to the message, so that the Act was valid under this section providing that any bill not returned by the governor within three days after presentation to him shall be a law as if he had signed it. Gray v. Taylor, (1911) 15 N. M. 742, 113 Pac. 588.

Vol. VII, p. 254, sec. 1850.

Implication of approval.—Under this section providing that legislative Acts of territories "shall be submitted to Congress, and if disapproved shall be null and of no effect," where an Act has been on the statute books for many years without any expression of disapproval by Congress, the implication is warranted that it was approved. Whitman College v. Berryman, (1907) 156 Fed. 112.

Vol. VII, p. 254, sec. 1851.

Exemption of railroad from taxation.—An Arizona statute (Act March 16, 1891, Laws 1891, pp. 61, 63, No. 41), exempting a railroad constructed pursuant to the Act from taxation for twenty years, is not invalid, as an excess of legislative power, under this section, giving the territory legislative power over all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. Bennett v. Nichols, (1905) 9 Ariz. 138, 80 Pac. 392.

For another case under this section, see Leatherwood v. Hill, (1906) 10 Ariz. 243, 89 Pac. 521.

Under this section, see Mason v. Stevens, (1902) 16 S. D. 320, 92 N. W. 424.

Vol. VII, p. 264, sec. 1.

Hawaii.—Section 56 of the Organic Act of Hawaii authorizes the creation of county and city municipalities by special Act, superseding, in respect to Hawaii, the general prohibition of Act of Congress of July 30, 1886, ch. 818. Emmeluth v. Oahu County, (1908) 19 Hawaii 171.

Fencing cultivated lands.—A territorial statute requiring the owners of cultivated lands in a certain county to protect them with fences of a prescribed kind, and making the right to recover damages from the owners of animals injuring the crops on such land depend on the maintenance of fences required by the law, is not invalid as a special law in contravention of this Act. Sears v. Fewson, (1909) 15 N. M. 132, 103 Pac. 268.

Specific permission to pass local laws.—General prohibitions in this Act against the enactment by territorial legislatures of local or special laws in certain enumerated cases, have no application where specific permission to the contrary is granted by the Organic Act applying to a particular territory. Ponce v. Roman Catholic Apostolic Church, (1908) 210 U. S. 296, 28 S. Ct. 737, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1068.

Fees of county officers.—In Territory v. Beaven, (1910) 15 N. M. 357, 110 Pac. 561, it appeared that county treasurers having previously been allowed, as compensation, four per cent. of the amount collected by them each year, a territorial law was passed dividing the counties into five classes, according to the amount of collections therein, the classification for each year being based on the collections for the preceding year, class A embracing counties in which the collections were $200,000 or more, and each succeeding class embracing counties in which the collections were an amount less than that of the preceding class. Treasurers of class A counties were allowed two per cent. on collections, and those of each succeeding class a larger per cent. than that of the preceding class. It was provided that in case the fees of a treasurer exceeded $4,500 in any year he should not receive the excess. The Act, the effect of which was to reduce the fees of eleven of the twenty-five county treasurers of the territory, by its terms went into effect when the terms of all the treasurers expired, with a proviso that as to counties of class A it should go into effect at once. It was held that the proviso was a local and special law, contravening this Act prohibiting territories decreasing, by such a law, the fees of public officers during their term; the character of a law, as general or local and special, being determined by its effect rather than its form; there being but one county in class A, while there were four other counties in which the treasurers had received, and, till the Act went into effect, would receive, more than $4,500 per year; and there being no such distinction—having reference to the subject-matter of the legislation, the reduction of the fees of almost half the county treasurers of the territory—between the classes of counties as to justify putting the Act in immediate effect as to class A alone.

For other cases under this section, see Bennett v. Nichols, (1905) 9 Ariz. 138, 80 Pac. 392; Leatherwood v. Hill, (1906) 10 Ariz. 243, 89 Pac. 521; Duffield v. Ashurst, (1909) 12 Ariz. 360, 100 Pac. 820.

Vol. VII, p. 267, sec. 4.

School district.—Under the provisions of this section a school district of a territory cannot become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to any amount which in the aggregate, including existing indebtedness, exceeds four per centum of the value of the taxable property within such school district, to be ascertained by the last assessment for territorial and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; and any contract entered into by its officers in violation of this section is void. Superior Mfg. Co. v. School Dist. No. 63, (1910) 28 Okla. 293, 114 Pac. 328.

Effect of acceptance of supplies.—Where the aggregate indebtedness of a school district, located in a territory, is in excess of four per centum of the value of the taxable property within such school district as shown by the last assessment for territorial and county taxes, the acceptance, retention, and use of furniture or supplies by the officers of such school district in its behalf will create no liability against the district for the value of the same. Superior Mfg. Co. v. School Dist. No. 63, (1910) 28 Okla. 293, 114 Pac. 328.

Vol. VII, p. 268, sec. 1. [Issuance of bonds, etc.]

Two-thirds majority.—This Act and Act New Mexico March 16, 1907 (Sess. L. 1907, p. 38, ch. 35), authorizing municipal bonds, notwithstanding the limitations on municipal indebtedness, if two-thirds of the qualified voters as defined shall vote therefor, require a two-thirds of those actually voting only, and not a two-thirds of all the voters of the municipality. Fabro v. Gallup, (1909) 15 N. M. 108, 103 Pac. 271.

Vol. VII, p. 286, sec. 1.

Public lands—Texas school grant.—The legal title to the Texas lands patented to Greer county, under the mistaken supposition that this county was Texas territory, and was, therefore, entitled to share in the grant of lands for school purposes to each county in the state, made by Texas Gen. Laws 1883, ch. 55, did not pass to the corporation subsequently organized out of the same territory as Greer county, Oklahoma, by the Act of Congress of May 4, 1896, but, upon the disappearance of the de facto Texas county, such title vested in the state of Texas. Greer County v. Texas, (1905) 197 U. S. 235, 25 S. Ct. 437, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 736.

TIMBER LANDS AND FOREST RESERVES.

Vol. VII, p. 290, sec. 2461.

A sale of timber by a homestead entryman before the completion of the requisite improvements, and before the receipt of a patent or final certificate, to carry out in good faith the acquisition and enjoyment of a homestead, even though a profit does incidentally result from the sale, is not void, under this section. King-Ryder Lumber Co. v. Scott, (1904) 73 Ark. 329, 84 S. W. 487.

A settler applying for a homestead, on making and filing the affidavit required and paying a certain sum proportionate to the amount of land applied for, acquires the right to occupy the land, to protect it from trespass by others, and to use it for all purposes incidental to its cultivation; also to cut and remove timber when necessary for the improvement of the land and the preparation of his farm for tillage, but not to fell timber, or permit it to be done by his vendee, for purposes of speculation or profit, as such act is prohibited by, and renders him and his vendee liable to prosecution under this section. Orrell v. Bay Mfg. Co., (1903) 83 Miss. 800, 36 So. 561.

Vol. VII, p. 296, sec. 5388.

Purchase from Indian allottee.—Conceding that the United States, as trustee for Indian allottees, has authority to protect them from imposition and fraud in respect to their lands, it cannot recover in trover from one who in good faith and for a fair price has purchased timber cut by an allottee from his land, where it has itself no beneficial interest in the land. U. S. v. Paine Lumber Co., (1907) 206 U. S. 467, 27 S. Ct. 697, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1139, (1904) 154 Fed. 263.

Vol. VII, p. 297, sec. 1.

What lands included.—The right to cut timber is not restricted to the particular spot or minor tract of land on which mining is being actually done, but extends to adjacent lands, they being mineral, although no mining development work has been done thereon; and whether or not a tract in question not so developed is mineral within the meaning of the statute is a question of fact, in an action to recover for timber cut, to be inferred by the jury from its surroundings and appearance, and applying to the facts their own common sense and observation. Morgan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 242.

The right to cut timber from public mineral lands, subject to mineral entry only, for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, extends to all such lands in the state or territory, without limitation to any local subdivision. U. S. v. Edgar, (1905) 140 Fed. 655.

To justify the cutting of timber under this Act, it is not essential to prove that the tract from which it was cut, if not developed as mining ground, presents such indications of mineral as would justify a prudent person experienced in such matters in the belief that it could be worked for mineral at a profit. Morgan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 242.

But the authority to cut timber from the public domain does not extend to land adjacent to lands valuable for mineral purposes; it only includes lands known to be themselves valuable for minerals, which are the only lands excluded by the federal statutes from any but mineral entry. U. S. v. Plowman, (1910) 216 U. S. 372, 30 S. Ct. 299, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 523, reversing (1907) 151 Fed. 1022, 81 C. C. A. 682.

One entering and occupying as a homestead public land, shown by the books of the Land Department to be subject to such entry, cannot, nor can any one claiming under him, justify the cutting and sale of timber therefrom on the ground that the land was in fact mineral, and not agricultural. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 914.

In an action by the United States to recover for timber taken from a tract of public land at the time covered by a homestead entry which had in fact been abandoned and was afterward relinquished, it is not a defense that the land was at the time of the trespass occupied by another, who after the relinquishment filed and perfected a homestead entry thereon. U. S. v. Bagnell Timber Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 795.

The use of timber taken from unsurveyed mineral land in the territory of Arizona in roasting ore at a mine in that territory, whether roasting ore be considered a part of mining or of smelting, is authorized by this section, notwithstanding a regulation of the Secretary of the Interior, promulgated under the supposed authority of that statute, that no timber can be used for smelting purposes, since the words of the statute, that the felling and use of the timber shall be "subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of the timber and of the undergrowth growing upon such lands, and for other purposes," cannot confer upon him the power to take from the industries designated the permission given by Congress. U. S. v. United Verde Copper Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 222, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 449, affirming (1903) 8 Ariz. 186, 71 Pac. 954.

The fact that timber is manufactured into lumber and sold as an article of merchandise, to be used in the state where it is cut, does not render such cutting unlawful, nor can it be made so by a regulation of the Secretary of the Interior, promulgated under the power given him by the Act to prescribe rules and regulations "for the protection of the timber and of the undergrowth growing upon said lands and for other purposes," such rules and regulations being intended merely to furnish detailed instructions as to the manner of taking the timber to prevent waste and unnecessary destruction. U. S. v. Rossi, (1904) 133 Fed. 380, 66 C. C. A. 442; U. S. v. Thayer, (1904) 133 Fed. 1022, 66 C. C. A. 681.

While the secretary may prescribe regulations concerning the removal of timber, and his interpretation of the intent of the Act is entitled to weight, he has no power to enlarge or restrict the purposes for which timber may be used. U. S. v. United Verde Copper Co., (1903) 8 Ariz. 186, 71 Pac. 954.

Evidence.—In an action by the United States to recover for timber cut from public lands, where the defense was that the cutting was justified under this Act, evidence is properly admitted to show the mineral character of other lands in the same vicinity, as well as of those from which the timber was taken, as tending to show the extent of the mineral district. U. S. v. Rossi, (1904) 133 Fed. 380, 66 C. C. A. 442; U. S. v. Thayer, (1904) 133 Fed. 1022, 66 C. C. A. 681.

Where defendant's right to cut and remove timber in question from the public domain was dependent on the land being mineral, and not subject to entry except for mineral entry, and there was testimony that the region had been prospected, and, though float was found over it, no mineral-bearing veins had been discovered, and that small tracts near defendant's mill were cultivated for crops, evidence that a witness cultivated to crops about three acres of ground on the flat near the creek, on which the land from which the timber in controversy was cut adjoined, and that such ground was suitable for agriculture, was admissible. Lynch v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 535.

The burden is on the defendant in an action by the United States to recover for the value of timber cut from the public domain, in which it claimed that the cutting was justified by such statute, to show that it had complied with the rules and regulations established by the Interior Department in that behalf, and, where there was no evidence of a compliance with such rules and regulations, a verdict in favor of defendant cannot be sustained. U. S. v. Basic Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 121 Fed. 504.

Measure of damages.—A person who cut and removed timber from public land in good faith, in the belief that he had a lawful right to do so under this Act, if not so justified, is liable in damages for the stumpage value of the timber only, and not for the manufactured value. Morgan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 242.

Vol. VII, p. 301, sec. 2.

Purpose.—That this section was intended to meet the evasions which would be resorted to from time to time is quite manifest. Schemes, devices, and subterfuges which ingenuity could invent, were in view equally with formal contracts. Nickell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 706.

Statement.—This section does not require the appellant to make his initial statement on knowledge derived solely from personal observation, and hence statements under the blank forms furnished by the Land Department that the applicant had personally examined the land applied for, and that he knew from his own personal knowledge that it was unfit for cultivation, uninhabited, etc., are improper. Robnett v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 778.

The facts stated in an application, including the fact that the application is not made for the purpose of sale, must not only be true when made, but must also be true when the land is paid for and the applicant receives his certificate of purchase or receiver's receipt. U. S. v. Brace, (1907) 149 Fed. 869.

Since an application to purchase lands from the government under this act is, in effect, the inauguration of a proceeding through which land is acquired from the government, in which the government is an interested party, such act covers an agreement by a clerk in the employ of the government in a local Land Office to receive compensation for services rendered in informing an entryman when certain land belonging to the United States would be open for entry under such act, and in assisting him to obtain title thereto from the United States under such act. U. S. v. Long, (1911) 184 Fed. 184.

Verification.—While this Act does not expressly require that the verification of the application shall be upon personal knowledge only of the applicant, the intention seems to be implied, and a regulation made by the Secretary of the Interior in supposed conformity with the direction of the statute that he prescribed regulations for carrying it into effect, that the applicant shall make a sworn statement that he has personally examined the land, and from his personal knowledge it is unfit for cultivation, and valuable chiefly for its timber, is not in conflict with or in excess of the power conferred by the statute. Ballinger v. U. S., (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 302.

Purchase on speculation.—A contract made after the application but before the consummation of the entry, by which the money to pay for the land was to be furnished by another, and the title when acquired was to be conveyed to such other, is not unlawful under the statute, and the procuring of such contract is not criminal, and cannot be made the basis of an indictment to defraud the United States of such lands under R. S. sec. 5440. U. S. v. Biggs, (1907) 157 Fed. 264, affirmed (1909) 211 U. S. 507, 29 S. Ct. 181, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 305.

An applicant for the purchase of land has the right after he has made his initial application and before final proof to contract to sell the title thereafter to be acquired, and the intending purchaser may lawfully advance to him the money with which to make final proof in order that he may comply with his contract. U. S. v. Barber Lumber Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 948.

Evidence.—Where circumstantial evidence is relied on to show that entries of lands under the Timber and Stone Act were fraudulent, and made for the benefit of others than the entrymen, to whom the timber on the lands was subsequently conveyed for a consideration shown, it is competent for either party to show the value of such timber, as a circumstance bearing upon the bona fides of the transaction. Olson v. U. S., (1904) 133 Fed. 849, 67 C. C. A. 21.

the date of the patent, and not from the date of the discovery of the fraud. U. S. v. Smith, (1910) 181 Fed. 545.

In a suit by the United States to cancel patents to lands acquired under this Act; for fraud, on the theory that the entrymen entered the lands in fact for others than themselves, allegations showing the rules and regulations of the Interior Department prescribing interrogatories to be propounded to applicants for timber lands on final proof and concerning other acts of the entrymen without warrant of law should be stricken from the bill as impertinent, since, if the entryman made his initial declaration in good faith and no other person at that time had any direct or indirect interest in the entry, the fact that subsequent thereto he contracted to sell the land to another was no objection to his right to complete his entry and obtain a patent. U. S. v. Kettenbach, (1909) 175 Fed. 463.

A bona fide purchaser of standing timber from the holders of receivers' final receipts for the purchase price of lands entered under this act cannot, upon avoidance for the fraud of the entrymen of the patents afterwards issued, be required to account to the federal government for the timber which it has paid for and cut and removed in reliance upon its purchase. U. S. v. Detroit Timber, etc., Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 321, 26 S. Ct. 282, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 499, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 663, 67 C. C. A. 1.

A purchaser from the patentees for value, and without notice of any fraud on the part of the entrymen, is a bona fide purchaser within the meaning of this act, and as such is entitled to protection, although such purchaser may have acquired an interest in the lands under a contract for the standing timber before the patents issued; since, by the doctrine of relation, the patents, when issued, became operative as of the date of the entries. U. S. v. Detroit Timber, etc., Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 321, 26 S. Ct. 282, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 499, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 663, 67 C. C. A. 1.

A purchaser of timber lands after receivers' final receipts have issued is entitled to protection, under this Act, as a bona fide purchaser, against the cancellation, for the original frauds of the entrymen, of the patents afterwards issued, unless he is shown to have had actual notice of such fraud. U. S. v. Clark, (1906) 200 U. S. 601, 26 S. Ct. 340, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 613, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 294.

Perjury.—The conditions imposed on the fraudulent claimant, to wit, the pains and penalties of perjury and the forfeiture of money paid, are distinct, and not one dependent on the other, so that it was not essential that a fraudulent claimant should have been convicted of perjury before a forfeiture of the moneys paid could be imposed. Emmons v. U. S., (1909) 175 Fed. 514.

An entryman having made an affidavit that he sought to purchase the land for his own benefit and not for speculation, cannot escape punishment for conspiracy on the ground that his pre-existing contract of sale relates to the timber only. Nickell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 702.

The oath is false and constitutes perjury where the applicant has made an agreement to sell the land, whether written or oral; its enforceability being immaterial. Boren v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 801.

The courts will take judicial notice of the qualification of the receiver of the Land Office to administer an oath, and hence an averment of the fact is not essential to the validity of an indictment for perjury committed by false swearing in an entry statement verified before him. U. S. v. Eddy, (1905) 134 Fed. 114.

But subornation of perjury cannot be based on a charge that the defendant induced an applicant for the purchase of land to falsely swear in his initial application that he had personally examined the land, and stated from personal knowledge that the same was unfit for cultivation. Robnett v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 778.

Vol. VII, p. 304, sec. 3.

Speculative purpose.—The omission in this section of any reiteration of the requirements of the statute regarding a speculative purpose on the part of the applicant, his bona fides, and his intent to acquire the land for himself alone is equivalent to an express declaration by Congress that these requirements shall not be exacted at the final hearing. Williamson v. U. S., (1908) 207 U. S. 425, 28 S. Ct. 163, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 278.

Regulations.—The authority of the Commissioner of the General Land Office under this section to prescribe regulations to carry out the provisions of this Act, does not embrace the power to require an applicant to make oath on final hearing of his bona fides and of the absence of contract or agreement in respect to the title, which Congress has in that act, by express intentment, excluded from the requirements to be observed on such final hearing. Williamson v. U. S., (1908) 207 U. S. 425, 28 S. Ct. 163, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 278.

Vol. VII, p. 304, sec. 4.

A bill by the United States against a number of corporations and individuals to recover for a joint trespass upon public lands, and the unlawful and wilful cutting and removal of timber therefrom by defendants, who are alleged to have conspired for the purpose, does not state a cause of action in equity for an accounting, because it is alleged that, by reason of the complicated relations between the defendants, complainant is unable to state the quantity of timber taken by each. U. S. v. Bitter Root Development Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 274, 66 C. C. A. 652.

The United States cannot maintain a suit in equity for an accounting of the gains and profits made by defendants from the alleged unlawful and wilful cutting and removal of timber from public lands; its right of recovery being confined to damages for trespass, or damages, recoverable in an action in the nature of trover, in an amount to be based on the value of the manufactured product. U. S. v. Bitter Root Development Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 274, 66 C. C. A. 652.

A suit by the United States to recover for trespass upon public lands, and the cutting and removal of timber therefrom, does not present a case of mutual accounts, cognizable in equity, because of an allegation that complainant granted licenses to defendants to cut timber from certain other lands, and that under cover of such licenses they unlawfully and wilfully cut timber from the lands in suit; nor is such a suit maintainable on the theory of establishing a trust in property purchased with the proceeds of the timber taken, where it is not alleged that defendants are insolvent. U. S. v. Bitter Root Development Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 274, 66 C. C. A. 652.

Vol. VII, p. 305, sec. 5.

A compromise of a prosecution for cutting timber from public lands, effected by making the payment provided for by this act, is not conclusive evidence of guilt in the party making the same. Cox v. Cameron Lumber Co., (1905) 39 Wash. 562, 82 Pac. 116.

Vol. VII, p. 312, sec. 1. [Rules and regulations.]

This provision is not unconstitutional as delegating legislative authority to the Secretary of the Interior. U. S. v. Grimaud, (1911) 220 U. S. 506, 31 S. Ct. 480, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 563, reversing (1909) 170 Fed. 205; Dent v. U. S., (1904) 8 Ariz. 413, 76 Pac. 455.

Rule forbidding grazing and driving.—That portion of rule 72 promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior which forbids the grazing upon or driving across a forest reservation of any live stock without a permit, except as otherwise allowed by regulation, and declares that such acts shall "constitute trespass, punishable by fine and imprisonment," so far as relates to the prohibition, is within the authority conferred on the Secretary by this act. U. S. v. Domingo, (1907) 152 Fed. 566.

Grazing stock on a forest reserve without the permit required by the Secretary of Agriculture under authority conferred by this section, is an offense against the United States. U. S. r. Grimaud, (1911) 220 U. S. 506, 31 S. Ct. 480, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 563, reversing (1909) 170 Fed. 205.

Vol. VII, p. 314, sec. 1. [Selection of lieu lands.]

Title.—Land selected under this Act is not the subject of either a legal or an equitable title where the township from which the selection was made was not sectionized, and the selection was also liable to be defeated by prior adverse claims, or by proof that the lands were mineral in character. Peters v. Van Horn, (1905) 37 Wash. 550, 79 Pac. 1110.

No legal or equitable title in the land to be received in exchange is acquired until the final consummation of the exchange. Pacific Live Stock Co. v. Isaacs, (1908) 52 Ore. 54, 96 Pac. 460.

Where an owner of land within a forest reserve executed a deed of relinquishment it was held that the title vested in the government on the filing of the deed for record; the title not being dependent on the selection of the land granted in lieu thereof. Territory v. Perrin, (1905) 9 Ariz. 316, 83 Pac. 361.

Conveyance of land.—This Act contains nothing which either expressly or inferentially would prevent an owner who has conveyed his land to the United States from executing an instrument which would operate to pass to another such title as he might thereafter acquire to lieu lands selected by him; and a grantee in such an instrument, who purchases and pays for the same in good faith after his grantor has made his selection, although before its approval, on such approval and the issuance of a patent, acquires the title as a bona fide purchaser and is entitled to protection as such. U. S. r. Hyde, (1909) 174 Fed. 175.

The tender to the Land Department by the holder of the record title to land within a forest reservation of a quitclaim deed to such land, to be exchanged for outside land under this Act does not vest title thereto in the United States until the deed is accepted and the exchange approved, nor does such tender deprive a court of jurisdiction of a suit by the United States to cancel the patent to such land for fraud; the Land Department having no power to determine such question. U. S. v. McClure, (1909) 174 Fed. 510.

Rules and regulations.—The Land Department has power to adopt reasonable rules and regulations for the administration of this section in so far as it authorizes the selection of public lands in lieu of lands relinquished in a forest reserve. Roughton v. Knight, (1911) 219 U. S. 537, 31 S. Ct. 297, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 326, (1909) 156 Cal. 123, 103 Pac. 844.

Vol. X, p. 406. [Act of March 3, 1905, ch. 1495.]

An owner of patented land in a forest reserve whose deed to the United States, made in contemplation of an exchange under the Act of June 4, 1897, was returned because not accompanied by a selection of lieu lands, as required by the regulations and practice of the Land Department, has no vested right to the exchange which would be saved by the exception in this act, in favor of selections theretofore made, and of existing contracts with the Secretary of the Interior. Roughton v. Knight, (1911) 219 U. S. 537, 31 S. Ct. 297, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 326, affirming (1909) 156 Cal. 123, 103 Pac. 844.

TONNAGE DUTIES.

Vol. VII, p. 318, sec. 4219.

Vessels within section.—The British steamship Ferdene, which transported coal belonging to the United States, designed for the navy, from Newport News to San Francisco, and had no other cargo, was not a vessel having on board goods, wares, and merchandise within the meaning of this section. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 426.

A vessel not registered in the United States is a vessel "not of the United States," within the meaning of this section, although owned by a citizen of the United States, and on her entry from a foreign port is subject to tonnage duty at the rate of fifty cents per ton thereunder. The Alta, (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 663.

A foreign-built vessel, owned entirely by a citizen of the United States, and entering a port of the United States from Manila, does not enter from a "foreign port or place," and is therefore not subject to tonnage duty under this section. The Alta, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 513.

Vol. VII, p. 324, sec. 4225.

Light money.—Through inadvertence, no "light-money" tax was demanded of the Tarantula, a foreign built, American owned steam yacht, on her arrival in this country at Newport News, but the tax was assessed and collected at her next port, New York, where the master presented a bill of sale to an American owner, acknowledged before the United States consul at London. It was held that since the Tarantula was not a vessel of the United States, and, on entering the port of Newport News, did not carry "a sea letter or other regular document issued from a custom-house of the United States, proving the vessel to be American property," as provided by R. S. sec. 4226, she therefore became liable to the "light-money" tax of fifty cents per ton, imposed by this section. (1903) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 75.

TRADEMARKS.

Vol. VII, p. 329, sec. 1.

The description of a trademark for wire rope as "a red or other distinctively colored streak applied to or woven in a wire rope" is too indefinite to be the subject of registration as a trademark. A. Leschen, etc., Rope Co. v. Broderick, etc., Rope Co., (1906) 201 U. S. 166, 28 S. Ct. 425, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 710, affirming (C. C. A. 1904) 134 Fed. 571.

The word "Keeplean," as applied to tooth brushes, is descriptive, and is not, therefore, a proper subject of a valid trademark. Florence Mfg. Co. v. Dowd, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 73, reversing (1909) 171 Fed. 122.

Where a trademark had not been registered, federal jurisdiction of a suit for unfair competition is not conferred by this Act, but exists only under the rules governing ordinary suits at law or in equity. A. B. Andrews Co. v. Puncture Proof Footwear Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 762.

Vol. VII, p. 330, sec. 3.

This section prohibits the registration of a trademark so closely resembling that of another as to create mistake or confusion in the mind of the public, and certainly the public is entitled to like protection against encroachment upon a common descriptive term. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co. v. Standard Paint Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 977.

Use of generic name.—It is the settled rule that no one can appropriate as a trademark a generic name, or one descriptive of an article of trade, its qualities, ingredients, or characteristics, or any sign, word, or symbol which, from the nature of the fact it is used to signify, others may employ with equal truth. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co. v. Standard Paint Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 977.

Vol. VII, p. 331, sec. 7.

Where a bill for unfair competition in the use of a trademark did not allege that the name was used or to be used on goods intended to be transported to a foreign country or in commerce with Indian tribes, the federal Circuit Court did not acquire jurisdiction under this section. A. B. Andrews Co. v. Puncture Proof Footwear Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 762.

Vol. X, p. 408, sec. 1.

Surname as trademark.—This Act does not make a surname a valid trademark which did not before constitute a valid trademark. Since every man is entitled to the use of his name reasonably and honestly in every way, and cannot be obliged to abandon or unreasonably restrict such use, a family surname is not the subject of a valid trademark as against others of the same name. Thaddeus Davids Co. v. Davids, (1908) 165 Fed. 792.

Vol. X, p. 410, sec. 5.

"In actual and exclusive use," etc.—This section, when read in connection with other provisions, evidently contemplated that some marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several states or with the Indian tribes, other than proper or technical trademarks, might be registered, and that such marks, when registered, should have the same exclusive nature as proper or technical trademarks, provided such marks had been "in actual and exclusive use as a trademark of the applicant or his predecessors from whom he derived title for ten years next preceding the passage of this Act." John T. Dyer Quarry Co. v. Schuylkill Stone Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 557.

The purpose of the proviso was to permit the registration of marks not amounting to technical trademarks where they had been exclusively used as such for more than ten years and in which the user had thereby acquired property rights, even though within the prohibited classes, unless contrary to public policy, as containing immoral or scandalous matter, etc., and that a personal name which had been so used as a trademark for more than ten years was entitled to registration and protection thereunder. Thaddeus Davids Co. v. Davids, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 801. See also Hutchinson v. Loewy, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 43.

Arbitrary or fanciful words as trademarks.

— No one can through the adoption and application of an arbitrary or fanciful word as a trademark for a certain article exclude others from using in connection with similar articles a geographical or descriptive name open to the public, on the ground that the latter name so closely resembles the former as to be calculated to mislead the purchasing public as to the origin, manufacture, or ownership of the articles sold, or for any other reason. Were it otherwise one could by indirection practically acquire a monopoly in the use of such geographical or descriptive name of which the law forbids an exclusive appropriation. John T. Dyer Quarry Co. v. Schuylkill Stone Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 557.

In American Tobacco Co. v. Polacsek, (1909) 170 Fed. 117, it was held that the trade name "Virgin Leaf" attached to the complainant's tobacco was not synonymous with "Virginia Leaf," nor was it descriptive of the tobacco used, but was "an arbitrary fanciful name intended to denote the purity of the tobacco," and was therefore a valid trademark; and that the defendant, having used the name "Virgin Leaf" in connection with the sale of cigarettes, claiming his use of these words to be merely by way of substitution for "Virginia Leaf," and descriptive of the tobacco of which the cigarettes were made, infringed the trademark of the complainant; and he was confined by the court to the use of the word "Virginia," instead of "Virgin." The court thus not only compelled the defendant to desist from the use of the arbitrary or fanciful name, but recognized its right to use the appropriate geographical and descriptive term.

Where complainant had used the trademark "Beats-All" attached to lead pencils since 1888, and in interstate commerce since before April 1, 1895, and on April 17, 1906, obtained registration of the mark in the Patent Office, it was held that such registration gave the words, which originally were only descriptive and not the subject of a valid trademark, a secondary meaning, indicating goods exclusively manufactured by complainant, which made the words available as a proper trademark. American Lead Pencil Co. v. Gottlieb, (1910) 181 Fed. 178.

While registration is made "prima facie evidence of ownership" and confers certain other benefits upon the owner of the registered trademark, it does not make a trademark either more or less exclusive than it would have been without registration. The extent of its exclusiveness is not in the least affected by registration. The same sound policy for the prevention of objectionable monopolies which will not permit one, by the use of an unregistered trademark consisting of an arbitrary or fanciful word or term, to exclude others from using a descriptive or geographical name open to the public in connection with the sale of articles similar to those to which such arbitrary or fanciful word or term has been applied, operates in all respects with equal force and effect, notwithstanding the fact that such arbitrary or fanciful word or term has been registered. John T. Dyer Quarry Co. v. Schuylkill Stone Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 557.

Vol. X, p. 412, sec. 10.

Assignment of trademark. — A trademark registered under this Act cannot be assigned unless the good will of the business is also transferred; and where a trader had sold a particular article under a selected name to such extent as to secure registration, an assignment of the trademark confers no rights on the assignee if the assignor continues to sell the same article, although under a different name. Eiseman v. Schiffer, (1907) 157 Fed. 473.

Vol. X, p. 413, sec. 16.

The certificate of registration is, by this section, made prima facie proof of ownership of the trademark; but such proof may be overcome if it be made to appear that the applicant was not entitled to the particular trademark which he sought to appropriate. Spiegel v. Zuckerman, (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 63.

Where, in a prior suit for infringement of a trademark, complainants were found not to be the rightful owners thereof, and it was determined that H. & Co. had previously used the trademark and were entitled thereto, the conclusiveness of such adjudication as between the parties and their privies is not affected by complainants' subsequent registration of the trademark in ex parte proceedings, notwithstanding that this section declares that registration of a trademark is itself prima facie evidence of ownership. Gaines v. Rock Spring Distilling Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 544.

TRADE UNIONS AND COMBINATIONS AND TRUSTS.

Vol. VII, p. 336, sec. 1.

Explanatory note.—Many of the notes under this section are also applicable to section 2 of this Act, as in a majority of the cases a violation of both sections is alleged.

Validity of Act.—The prohibitions of this Act against restraints or monopolization of trade or commerce do not exceed the authority of Congress to regulate commerce, as applied to undue restraints of interstate or foreign commerce in petroleum and its products, by contract, combination, or conspiracy, or monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part of such commerce. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177.

Delegation of legislative power.—Legislative power is not unconstitutionally delegated to the courts by the provisions of this Act prohibiting combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, because the general language of these provisions leaves it to the judiciary to decide whether, in a given case, the particular acts come within the condemnation of the statute. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177.

Validity of criminal provisions.—This Act is primarily a criminal statute, prohibiting certain acts as unlawful restraints and monopolies of interstate trade and commerce and prescribing the punishment therefor, the jurisdiction conferred on Circuit Courts as courts of equity by section 4 to "prevent and restrain violations of this Act" being made dependent on the preceding criminal sections and confined to preventing the carrying out of that which is declared in the prior sections to be criminal. Therefore every decision of the courts sustaining an injunction granted under such section has necessarily determined that the preceding sections are valid, and that the things enjoined were crimes, and in view of the numerous decisions of the Supreme Court upholding such injunction the validity of the criminal sections is no longer open to question in the inferior courts. U. S. v. American Naval Stores Co., (1909) 186 Fed. 592; U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 188 Fed. 92.

The essentials of a contract or combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce, inhibited by the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, were discussed in a charge to a grand jury in In re Charge to Grand Jury, (1907)

151 Fed. 834, and in U. S. v. American Naval Stores Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 455.

Construction.—Sections 1 and 2 make illegal two different things: Section 1, combinations in restraint of interstate trade and commerce; and section 2, combinations or conspiracies to monopolize, or to attempt to monopolize, interstate trade and commerce. Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 775.

The words "restraint of trade," as used in this Act, should be given a meaning which will not destroy the individual right to contract, and render difficult, if not impossible, any movement of trade in the channels of commerce, the free movement of which it was the purpose of the statute to protect. U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700.

One of the purposes of the Anti-trust Act, in making illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, is to maintain interstate commerce on the basis of free competition, and any contract, combination, or conspiracy the purpose or direct effect of which is to restrict such free competition by way of transportation or otherwise, is in restraint of interstate commerce and unlawful. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 427.

"Rule of reason."—The standard of reason which has heretofore been applied at the common law and in the United States in dealing with subjects of the character embraced by the prohibitions of sections 1, 2, of this Act, against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce, is intended to be the measure used for the purpose of determining whether, in a given case, a particular act has, or has not, brought about the wrong against which the statute provides. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 503, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177; U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 21 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700.

In Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., supra, the court, through Chief Justice White, said: "In substance, the propositions urged by the government are reducible to this: That the language of the statute embraces every contract, combination, etc., in restraint of trade, and hence its text leaves no room for the exercise of judgment, but simply imposes the plain duty of applying its prohibitions to every case within its literal language. The error involved lies in assuming the matter to be decided. This is true, because, as the acts which may come under the classes stated in the first section and the restraint of trade to which that section applies are not specifically enumerated or defined, it is obvious that judgment must in every case be called into play in order to determine whether a particular act is embraced within the statutory classes, and whether, if the act is within such classes, its nature or effect causes it to be a restraint of trade within the intendment of the Act. To hold to the contrary would require the conclusion either that every contract, act, or combination of any kind or nature, whether it operated a restraint on trade or not, was within the statute, and thus the statute would be destructive of all right to contract or agree or combine in any respect whatever as to subjects embraced in interstate trade or commerce, or, if this conclusion were not reached, then the contention would require it to be held that, as the statute did not define the things to which it related, and excluded resort to the only means by which the acts to which it relates could be ascertained — the light of reason — the enforcement of the statute was impossible because of its uncertainty. The merely generic enumeration which the statute makes of the acts to which it refers, and the absence of any definition of restraint of trade as used in the statute, leaves room for but one conclusion, which is, that it was expressly designed not to unduly limit the application of the Act by precise definition, but, while clearly fixing a standard, that is, by defining the ulterior boundaries which could not be transgressed with impunity, to leave it to be determined by the light of reason, guided by the principles of law and the duty to apply and enforce the public policy embodied in the statute in every given case, whether any particular act or contract was within the contemplation of the statute."

Reasonableness of restraint.—In the Standard Oil case (Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619), White, C. J., in distinguishing the Freight Association case and the Joint Traffic case, cited in the original note, said: "Both the cases involved the legality of combinations or associations of railroads engaged in interstate commerce for the purpose of controlling the conduct of the parties to the association or combination in many particulars. The association or combination was assailed in each case as being in violation of the statute. It was held that they were. It is undoubted that in the opinion in each case general language was made use of, which, when separated from its context, would justify the conclusion that it was decided that reason could not be resorted to for the purpose of determining whether the acts complained of were within the statute. It is, however, also true that the nature and character of the contract or agreement in each case was fully referred to, and suggestions as to their unreasonableness pointed out in order to indicate that they were within the prohibitions of the statute. As the cases cannot, by any possible conception, be treated as authoritative without the certitude that reason was resorted to for the purpose of deciding them, it follows as a matter of course that it must have been held by the light of reason, since the conclusion could not have been otherwise reached, that the assailed contracts or agreements were within the general enumeration of the statute, and that their operation and effect brought about the restraint of trade which the statute prohibited. This being inevitable, the deduction can in reason only be this: That in the cases relied upon, it having been found that the acts complained of were within the statute, and operated to produce the injuries which the statute forbade, that resort to reason was not permissible in order to allow that to be done which the statute prohibited. This being true, the rulings in the case relied upon, when rightly appreciated, were therefore this, and nothing more: That as considering the contracts or agreements, their necessary effect, and the character of the parties by whom they were made, they were clearly restraints of trade within the purview of the statute, they could not be taken out of that category by indulging in general reasoning as to the expediency or nonexpediency of having made the contracts, or the wisdom or want of wisdom of the statute which prohibited their being made. That is to say, the cases but decided that the nature and character of the contracts creating, as they did, a conclusive presumption which brought them within the statute, such result was not to be disregarded by the substitution of a judicial appreciation of what the law ought to be for the plain judicial duty of enforcing the law as it was made. But aside from reasoning, it is true to say that the cases relied upon do not, when rightly construed, sustain the doctrine contended for, is established by all of the numerous decisions of this court which have applied and enforced the Anti-Trust Act, since they all, in the very nature of things, rest upon the premise that reason was the guide by which the provisions of the Act were in every case interpreted. Indeed, intermediate the decision of the two cases, that is, after the decision in the Freight Association case, and before the decision in the Joint Traffic case, the case of Hopkins v. U. S., (1898) 171 U. S. 578, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 290, 19 S. Ct. 40, was decided, the opinion being delivered by Mr. Justice Peckham, who wrote both the opinions in the Freight Association and the Joint Traffic cases. And referring in the Hopkins case to the broad claim made as to the rule of interpretation announced in the Freight Association case, it was said (page 592): 'To treat as condemned by the Act all agreements under which, as a result, the cost of conducting an interstate commercial business may be increased, would enlarge the application of the Act far beyond the fair meaning of the language used. There must be some direct and immediate effect upon interstate commerce in order to come within the Act.' And in the Joint Traffic case this statement was expressly reiterated and approved, and illustrated by example. Like limitation on the general language used in Freight Association and Joint Traffic cases is also the clear result of Bement v. National Harrow Co., (1902) 186 U. S. 70, 92, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 1058, 1069, 22 S. Ct. 747, and especially of Cincinnati, etc., Packet Co. v. Bay, (1906) 200 U. S. 179, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 428, 26 S. Ct. 208. If the criterion by which it is to be determined in all cases whether every contract, combination, etc., is a restraint of trade within the intentment of the law, is the direct or indirect effect of the acts involved, then, of course, the rule of reason becomes the guide, and the construction which we have given the statute, instead of being refuted by the cases relied upon, is by those cases demonstrated to be correct. This is true, because as the construction which we have deduced from the history of the Act and the analysis of its text is simply that in every case where it is claimed that an act or acts are in violation of the statute, the rule of reason, in the light of the principles of law and the public policy which the Act embodies, must be applied. From this it follows, since that rule and the result of the test as to direct or indirect, in their ultimate aspect, come to one and the same thing, that the difference between the two is therefore only that which obtains between things which do not differ at all. If it be true that there is this identity of result between the rule intended to be applied in the Freight Association case, that is, the rule of direct and indirect, and the rule of reason which, under the statute as we construe it, should be here applied, it may be asked how was it that in the opinion in the Freight Association case much consideration was given to the subject of whether the agreement or combination which was involved in that case could be taken out of the prohibitions of the statute upon the theory of its reasonableness. The question is pertinent and must be fully and frankly met; for if it be now deemed that the Freight Association case was mistakenly decided or too broadly stated, the doctrine which it announced should be either expressly overruled or limited. The confusion which gives rise to the question results from failing to distinguish between the want of power to take a case which by its terms or the circumstances which surrounded it, considering among such circumstances the character of the parties, is plainly within the statute, out of the operation of the statute by resort to reason in effect to establish that the contract ought not to be treated as within the statute, and the duty in every case where it becomes necessary from the nature and character of the parties to decide whether it was within the statute to pass upon that question by the light of reason. This distinction, we think, serves to point out what, in its ultimate conception, was the thought underlying the reference to the rule of reason made in the Freight Association case — especially when such reference is interpreted by the context of the opinion and in the light of the subsequent opinion in the Hopkins case and in Cincinnati, etc., Packet Co. v. Bay. And in order not in the slightest degree to be wanting in frankness, we say that in so far, however, as by separating the general language used in the opinions in the Freight Association and Joint Traffic cases from the context and the subject and parties with which the cases were concerned, it may be conceived that the language referred to conflicts with the construction which we give the statute, they are necessarily now limited and qualified. We see no possible escape from this conclusion if we are to adhere to the many cases decided in this court in which the anti-trust law has been applied and enforced, and if the duty to apply and enforce that law in the future is to continue to exist. The first is true, because the construction which we now give the statute does not in the slightest degree conflict with a single previous case decided concerning the anti-trust law, aside from the contention as to the Freight Association and Joint Traffic cases, and because every one of those cases applied the rule of reason for the purpose of determining whether the subject before the court was within the statute. The second is also true, since, as we have already pointed out, unaided by the light of reason it is impossible to understand how the statute may in the future be enforced and the public policy which it establishes be made efficacious."

State and interstate commerce distinguished. — If a contract in restraint of trade only affects products within the limits of a state, it is subject only to state laws; any remote or incidental effect on interstate commerce being insufficient to bring it within the federal law, but if, in addition, it attempts to control the disposition of the manufactured article across state lines, it then directly affects interstate commerce, and is within the prohibition of the federal Act. Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 254.

In C. H. Albers Commission Co. v. Spencer, (1907) 205 Mo. 105, 103 S. W. 523, it was held that a contract made in Missouri to be performed there, for the sale of wheat for future delivery, was not affected by the federal Anti-trust Act, though the buyer made other purchases of wheat through Chicago agencies, the wheat to be delivered in Missouri; the latter contracts also being Missouri contracts, to be performed there.

Direct or indirect effect of contract, etc. — Of similar effect to the first paragraph of the original note, John D. Park, etc., Co. v. Hartman, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 24; Bigelow v. Calumet, etc., Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 721, affirming (1908) 167 Fed. 704; Union Pac. Coal Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 737; U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 102; Harbison-Walker Refractories Co. v. Stanton, (1910) 227 Pa. St. 55, 75 Atl. 988.

The interference, if any, with interstate commerce, contemplated by a contract for the sale of certain river craft, which permitted a suspension of payment of instalments of the purchase price in case of serious competition over a route between two named Ohio ports on the Ohio river, and required the vendors to withdraw from such competition for five years, was held to be insignificant to render the contract invalid under this Act, as imposing a restraint on interstate commerce. Cincinnati, etc., Packet Co. v. Bay, (1906) 200 U. S. 179, 26 S. Ct. 208, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 428.

The purchase by one railroad company of a controlling interest in the stock of another, which was a competitor in the carrying of anthracite coal between the mines and New York harbor, was held not to constitute a combination in restraint of interstate commerce in such coal, or to monopolize such commerce, unlawful under this Act, where the predominating motive in the purchase was to preserve traffic arrangements which were important to the purchasing company, although its necessary incidental effect was to eliminate competition between the two roads in the coal-carrying business. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 428.

Sale of business and good will.—It is well settled that the sale of a business, and the surrender of the good will pertaining to that business, and an agreement thereunder, within reasonable limitations as to time and territory, not to enter into competition with the purchaser, when made as part of the sale of the business, and not as a device to control commerce, is not within this Act. Camors-McConnell Co. v. McConnell, (1905) 140 Fed. 412, affirmed (C. C. A.) 140 Fed. 987; Darius Cole Transp. Co. v. White Star Line, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 65; Harbison-Walker Refractories Co. v. Stanton, (1910) 227 Pa. St. 55, 75 Atl. 988.

But in Monongahela River Consol. Coal, etc., Co. v. Jutte, (1904) 210 Pa. St. 288, 59 Atl. 1088, it was held that a contract by which the owner of coal lands sold the same with an agreement not to engage in mining or shipping coal in the territory traversed by the "Monongahela, Ohio, and Mississippi rivers and their tributaries" for ten years, in so far as it affects business carried on in the territory adjacent to the Ohio and Mississippi rivers outside of Pennsylvania, is a violation of this Act.

munity from prosecution in the state courts for the offense disclosed. Hale v. Henkel, (1906) 201 U. S. 43, 26 S. Ct. 371, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 652; Nelson v. U. S., (1906) 201 U. S. 92, 26 S. Ct. 359, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 673; In re Kittle, (1910) 180 Fed. 946.

The provision of the Act granting immunity to a witness testifying to violations of this Act is not retroactive; the constitutional guaranty being satisfied by a construction that the witness is not subject to future prosecution after giving his testimony. In re Kittle, (1910) 180 Fed. 946.

In U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 186 Fed. 1002, it appeared that the defendants were indicted in 1905 for conspiracy to monopolize interstate commerce in fresh meats, in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, but an acquittal was directed, on the ground that they were immune from prosecution because of testimony given and evidence furnished by them before the Commissioner of Corporations in relation to the transactions which formed the basis for the indictments. It was held that such immunity did not extend to a subsequent prosecution for continuing the same conspiracy thereafter; nor did it obliterate the facts testified to, which, if legally competent and relevant, might be shown in the subsequent prosecution.

Illegal contract as defense to suit.—A recovery upon an account for goods sold and delivered by a corporation created to effectuate a combination of manufacturers of certain articles intended and having the effect directly to restrain and monopolize trade and commerce, in violation of the Anti-trust Act, cannot be had where the account is made up, within the knowledge of both buyer and seller, with direct reference to, and in execution of, the agreements which constitute the illegal combination. Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight, etc., Co., (1909) 212 U. S. 227, 29 S. Ct. 280, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 486, wherein Harlan, J., said, in distinguishing this case from Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., (1902) 184 U. S. 540, 22 S. Ct. 431, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 679, cited in the original note: "The present case is plainly distinguishable from the Connolly case. In that case the defendant, who sought to avoid payment for the goods purchased by him under contract, had no connection with the general business or operations of the alleged illegal corporation that sold the goods. He had nothing whatever to do with the formation of that corporation and could not participate in the profits of its business. His contract was to take certain goods at an agreed price, nothing more, and was not in itself illegal, nor part of nor in execution of any general plan or scheme that the law condemned. The contract of purchase was wholly collateral to and independent of the agreement under which the combination had been previously formed by others in Ohio. It was the case simply of a corporation that dealt with an entire stranger to its management and operations, and sold goods that it owned to one who wished to buy them. In short, the defense in the Connolly case was that the plaintiff corporation, although owning the pipe in question and having authority to sell and pass title to the property, was precluded by reason alone of its illegal character from having a judgment against the purchaser. We held that that defense could not be sustained, either upon the principles of the common law or under the Anti-trust Act of Congress. The case now before us is an entirely different one. The Continental Wall Paper Company seeks, in legal effect, the aid of the court to enforce a contract for the sale and purchase of goods which, it is admitted by the demurrer, was in fact and was intended by the parties to be based upon agreements that were and are essential parts of an illegal scheme. We state the matter in this way because the plaintiff, by its demurrer, admits, for the purposes of this case, the truth of all the facts alleged in the third defense. It is admitted by the demurrer to that defense that the account sued on has been made up in execution of the agreements that constituted or out of which came the illegal combination formed for the purpose and with effect of both restraining and monopolizing trade and commerce among the several states. The present suit is not based upon an implied contract of the defendant company to pay a reasonable price for goods that it purchased, but upon agreements, to which both the plaintiff and the defendant were parties, and pursuant to which the accounts sued on were made out, and which had for their object, and which it is admitted had directly the effect, to accomplish the illegal ends for which the Continental Wall Paper Company was organized. If judgment be given for the plaintiff the result, beyond all question, will be to give the aid of the court in making effective the illegal agreements that constituted the forbidden combination. These considerations make it evident that the present case is different from the Connolly case. In that case the court regarded the record as presenting the question whether a voluntary purchaser of goods at stipulated prices, under a collateral, independent contract, can escape an obligation to pay for them upon the ground merely that the seller, which owned the goods, was an illegal combination or trust. We held that he could not, and nothing more touching that question was decided or intended to be decided in the Connolly case. The question here is whether the plaintiff company can have judgment upon an account which, it is admitted by demurrer, was made up, within the knowledge of both seller and buyer, with direct reference to and in execution of certain agreements under which an illegal combination, represented by the seller, was organized. Stated shortly, the present case is this: The plaintiff comes into court admitting that it is an illegal combination whose operations restrain and monopolize commerce and trade among the states, and asks a judgment that will give effect, as far as it goes, to agreements that constituted that combination, and by means of which the combination proposes to accomplish forbidden ends. We hold that such a judgment cannot be granted without departing from the statutory rule, long established in the jurisprudence of both this country and England, that a court will not lend its aid, in any way, to a party seeking to realize the fruits of an agreement that appears to be tainted with illegality, although the result of applying that rule may sometimes be to shield one who has got something for which, as between man and man, he ought, perhaps, to pay, but for which he is unwilling to pay. In such cases the aid of the court is denied, not for the benefit of the defendant, but because public policy demands that it should be denied without regard to the interests of individual parties. It is of no consequence that the present defendant company had knowledge of the alleged illegal combination and its plans, or was directly or indirectly a party thereto. Its interests must be put out of view altogether when it is sought to have the assistance of the court in accomplishing ends forbidden by the law." See also McConnell v. Camors-McConnell Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 162 Fed. 321.

In Darius Cole Transp. Co. v. White Star Line, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 64, it appeared that the libellant and respondent were both owners of steamers running regularly between Detroit and Toledo, and for a number of years had operated under a pooling arrangement which gave them a monopoly. At the expiration of such arrangement libellant sold one of its boats and leased the other to respondent for a term of three years, to be run between such two points, and at the same time transferred its good will, and agreed not to engage in competition during the term. The rental reserved was more than the steamer could have earned operated independently. It was held, on the evidence, that the dominant purpose of the parties was to enable respondent to maintain its monopoly of the business, and that the lease was void as in violation of this Act, and rent could not be recovered thereon.

In order to defeat a suit to enforce a contract on the ground that its enforcement is sought to aid and facilitate the carrying out of an illegal combination in restraint of trade, it must appear that the contract is directly connected with such lawful purpose, and not merely collateral thereto. Camors-McConnell Co. v. McConnell, (1905) 140 Fed. 412, affirmed (C. C. A.) 140 Fed. 987; Hadley Dean Plate Glass Co. v. Highland Glass Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 242; Northwestern Consol. Milling Co. v. Callam, (1910) 177 Fed. 786.

That a complainant is itself, or is a member of, a combination in violation of the federal anti-trust statute, is not a defense available in an action for the infringement of a patent, nor does it show a defect in complainant's title. Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Laemmle, (1910) 178 Fed. 104; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Ullman, (1910) 186 Fed. 174.

In Cincinnati, etc., Packet Co. v. Bay, (1906) 200 U. S. 179, 26 S. Ct. 208, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 428, it was held that a purchaser of river craft could not invoke the Anti-trust Acts to relieve him from his obligation to pay the purchase price, because of his covenant to maintain the present traffic rates, which were not declared by the contract to enter into the consideration of the sale — especially where the rates referred to primarily, if not exclusively, related to domestic and not to interstate business.

In R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Allen Bros. Tobacco Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 819, it was held that a claim that a conveyance by one manufacturing corporation to another of all its property, including its trademarks, trade names, brands, and labels, contains a provision in violation of the anti-trust law of the United States, is not available as a defense by another manufacturer when sued for infringement or unfair competition in respect to a trademark, brand, or label, where it is shown that the same has been continuously used by the grantee as its own since a time prior to the commencement of the alleged infringement or unfair imitation.

State laws. — State legislatures, in the exercise of their power to deal with monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade, may provide their own methods of procedure and determine the methods and means by which their legislation may be made effective, subject only to the qualifications that such procedure must not work a denial of fundamental rights, or conflict with specific and applicable provisions of the Federal Constitution. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 96, 29 S. Ct. 220, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 417, affirming (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162, 106 S. W. 918.

The Massachusetts statute (Rev. Laws, ch. 56, sec. 1) providing that a person, firm, corporation, or association of persons, doing business in Massachusetts, shall not make it a condition of the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, that the purchaser shall not deal in those of any person, firm, corporation, or association of persons, but that the section shall not prohibit the appointment of agents or sole agents for the sale of, nor the making of contracts for the exclusive sale of, goods, wares, or merchandise, is not repugnant to Const. U. S., art. 1, sec. 8, giving Congress power to regulate commerce, notwithstanding the enactment of the federal anti-trust law, prohibiting contracts directly affecting interstate or foreign commerce by way of restraint of trade or creation of a monopoly. Com. v. Strauss, (1906) 191 Mass. 545, 78 N. E. 136.

The Missouri statutes (Acts of March 21, 1906, ch. 117, and March 13, 1908, ch. 8), authorizing pooling by farmers, of their products, do not violate the federal Anti-trust Act, as they have no relation to interstate commerce, being confined in their operation to products grown and pooled in the state and to sales therein. Com. v. Hodges, (1910) 137 Ky. 233, 125 S. W. 680.

Territorial laws. — The Oklahoma statute (chapter 83, Wilson's Rev. & Ann. Stat. Okla. 1903), being an enactment of the legislative assembly of the territory of Oklahoma, passed Dec. 25, 1890, entitled "An Act to prevent combinations in restraint of trade," is not in conflict or inconsistent with this Act. Territory v. Long Bell Lumber Co., (1908) 22 Okla. 890, 99 Pac. 911; Wagner v. Minnie Harvester Co., (1910) 25 Okla. 558, 106 Pac. 969.

Form not material. — The generic character of the prohibitions of this Act against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, and monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part thereof, covers every conceivable act which can possibly come within the spirit or purpose of the condemnation of the laws, without regard to the garb in which such acts are clothed. Loewe v. Lawlor, (1908) 208 U. S. 274, 28 S. Ct. 301, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 488; U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700; Darius Cole Transp. Co. v. White Star Line, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 65; U. S. v. Du Pont de Nemours, (1911) 188 Fed. 127.

Distinction between restraint of trade and restraint of competition. — In U. S. v. Du Pont de Nemours, (1911) 188 Fed. 150, the court said: "There is a distinction between restraint of competition and restraint of trade. The latter expression had, when the Anti-trust Act was passed, a definite legal signification. Not every combination in restraint of competition was in a legal sense in restraint of trade. Two men in the same town engaged in the same business as competitors may unite in a copartnership, and thereafter, as between themselves, substitute co-operation for competition. Their combination restrains competition, and if their town is located near the line between two states, and each has been trading in both states, their combination restrains competition in interstate trade. But it does not necessarily follow that such restraint of competition is a restraint of interstate trade and commerce. The determination of whether it be so must depend upon the facts and circumstances of each individual case. It is undoubtedly the policy of the statute that competitive conditions in interstate trade should be maintained wherever their abolition would tend to suppress or diminish such trade. But this being true does not read into the statute a denunciation of all agreements that may restrain competition without regard to their purpose or direct effect to restrain 'trade or commerce among the several states.' To what extent the Anti-trust Act condemns combinations that restrain full and free competition in interstate trade is a question that has been much debated. For a dozen years, at least, it has been settled that it does not condemn combinations which only indirectly, remotely, or incidentally restrain interstate trade."

Only undue restraints of interstate or foreign trade or commerce are prohibited by the provisions of this Act declaring illegal every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of such trade or commerce, and making guilty of a misdemeanor every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize, any part of such trade or com- merce. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177; U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700.

Giving sole agency.—A contract by which a manufacturing company, whose products are sold in interstate commerce, makes another sole agent for the sale of its products, is not in violation of this Act, as in restraint of interstate trade and commerce, its effect on such commerce, if any, being indirect and incidental. Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 115.

Effect of acquittal on subsequent prosecutions.—A conspiracy to restrain or monopolize interstate commerce in violation of section 1 of this Act is necessarily a continuing one, and its illegality is not alone in the act of confederating or engaging in the conspiracy, but also in its continuation, so that a judgment of conviction or acquittal in a prosecution of those engaged in it is not a bar to their subsequent prosecution for continuing and carrying forward the same conspiracy thereafter, which is a new violation of the law. U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 186 Fed. 1002.

A contract to strangle a threatened competition, by preventing the construction of an immediately projected line of railway, which, if constructed, would naturally and substantially compete with an existing line for interstate traffic, is one in restraint of interstate commerce, and in violation of this Act. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 427; U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 102.

One competing railroad purchasing stock of another.—The purchase by an interstate railroad company of stock of another company operating a complete line, where it was insufficient in amount to give control of its competitor, and no attempt was made to exercise such control, did not effect a combination in restraint of interstate commerce, in violation of this Act. U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 102.

Competing railroads subsequently for capital stock of new line.—Notwithstanding the federal Anti-trust Act, two parallel and competing railroad companies each continuing its individual identity, organization, and control, may subscribe for the capital stock of a newly created railroad company to build a line which opens and serves additional territory, and may contribute the necessary funds for the construction of the new line. State v. Superior Ct., (1909) 51 Wash. 346, 98 Pac. 739.

Articles sold under a trade name.—The fact that an article of commerce is sold under a trade name or in a trade dress affords it no exemption from the common law or statutory rules against restraint of trade. John D. Park, etc., Co. v. Hartman, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 24.

Presumption from unification of control.—The unification of power and control over certain commodities which results from combining in the hands of a holding company the capital stock of the various corporations trading in such products, raises a presumption of an intent to exclude others from the trade, and thus centralize in the combination a perpetual control of the movement of these commodities in the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, in violation of the prohibitions of this Act against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or monopolization or attempt to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177.

Combination effected by series of separate acts.—A combination or conspiracy to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize interstate commerce, in violation of this Act, is not immune because it is carried into effect by a series of separate acts, each one of which taken alone is not objectionable, where the direct object and result of all is the perfection of a combination agreement whereby the free flow of commerce between the states, or the liberty of the trader, is obstructed. Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 774; U. S. v. Reading Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 427.

Boycott.—A combination by members of a labor organization to destroy an existing interstate traffic in hats by preventing the manufacturers, through the instrumentality of a boycott, from manufacturing hats intended for transportation beyond the state, and to prevent their vendees in other states from reselling the hats so transported, and from further negotiating with the manufacturers for the purchase and transportation of such hats from the place of manufacture to the various places of destination, is a combination "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states," within the meaning of the Anti-trust Act. Loewe v. Lawlor, (1908) 208 U. S. 274, 28 S. Ct. 301, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 488; Lawlor v. Loewe, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 522.

Conspiracy to restrain trade.—Where an indictment against a number of defendants charged them with a conspiracy among themselves and with others in restraint of interstate trade and commerce, in violation of section 1 of the Anti-trust Act, or to monopolize any part of such trade and commerce, in violation of section 2, to warrant a conviction it must be found that at least two of the defendants were parties to such a conspiracy. U. S. v. American Naval Stores Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 455.

Purchase of insolvent corporations.—This Act does not condemn the purchase by three corporations of two insolvent corporations engaged in the same business nor in the conduct of the business thereafter by the three purchasers, especially in an effort to liquidate the indebtedness. Northwestern Consol. Milling Co. v. Callam, (1910) 177 Fed. 786.

Fixing prices and terms of sale.—A coal company engaged in mining and selling its coal is not prohibited by the Anti-trust Act, from refusing to sell its coal, from selecting its customers, from fixing the price and terms on which it will sell its products, or from selling to different customers for different prices and on different terms. Union Pac. Coal Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 737.

Fixing price of copyrighted books.—Where the publishers and booksellers of the United States organized two membership associations, one known as the "American Publishers' Association," and the other as the "American Booksellers' Association," and together controlled the publication and sale of at least ninety per cent. of all copyrighted books, the objects of which were to compel owners and dealers of such books to purchase them of the members of the combination at an arbitrary price fixed by it, regardless of the actual value of the books as determined by a demand in an open market, or the condition of the books, and to compel all publishers and dealers of such books to come into the combination, be controlled by it, and sell books at prices fixed by it, regardless of the value of the books or the exigencies of the trade and situation of the seller, or be deprived of the privilege of purchasing, owning, and selling such books through a system of blacklisting, etc., the effect of which would be to cripple the business of any publisher or bookseller outside of the combination, such agreement was a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, (1905) 139 Fed. 155, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 15, which was affirmed in (1908) 210 U. S. 339, 28 S. Ct. 722, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1086; Mines v. Scribner, (1906) 147 Fed. 926.

Specification of particular kind of pavement by municipal council.—The specification by a municipal council, in its resolutions and ordinances for street improvement, that Trinidad lake asphalt should be the material used, was held not to constitute such a direct interference with interstate commerce as to be repugnant either to the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution or to the Sherman Anti-trust Act, because this particular kind of asphalt is a product of a foreign country, and there are deposits in several of the United States from which suitable asphalt can be had. Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 618, 24 S. Ct. 784, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1042.

Intention of parties.—In determining whether a transaction constituted an illegal contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade or commerce, or to monopolize the same in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, the intention of the parties may or may not be material, depending on whether or not the necessary effect of the agreement or acts done is to directly restrain such trade or to create such monopoly. If not, the intention is important. Bigelow v. Calumet, etc., Min. Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 704, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 721.

Contracts limiting communication of stock quotations.—Contracts with telegraph companies by which a board of trade limits the communication of quotations of prices on sales of grain and provisions for future delivery, collected by it, which it might have refrained from communicating to any one, do not effect a monopoly or amount to an attempt at monopoly, and are not contracts in restraint of trade, either under this Act or at common law. Chicago Board of Trade v. Christie Grain, etc., Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 236, 25 S. Ct. 637, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1031.

Combination of licorice paste manufacturers.—A secret arrangement between two corporations which together produced about eighty-five per cent. of all the licorice paste consumed in the United States and sold to consumers throughout the country, by which they ceased competition, fixed from time to time the prices at which each should sell, and apportioned the customers between them, and also by concerted action secured contracts with their chief if not only competitors, which enabled them to control either the output of such competitors or the prices at which and the persons to whom they should sell, and in pursuance of which scheme they were enabled to and did advance the price of the article to all purchasers nearly fifty per cent. within a few months, was one directly affecting interstate commerce, and constitutes a combination and conspiracy in restraint of such commerce, and an attempt to monopolize a portion of the same, within the prohibition of the anti-trust law. U. S. v. MacAndrews, etc., Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 823. See also U. S. Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 701.

Combination to manufacture article of necessity.—A combination the sole object of which is to manufacture an article of common necessity is not, without more, a violation of this Act, prohibiting combinations in restraint of interstate commerce. Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 774.

Combination of copper mining corporations.—That one Michigan mining corporation engaged in mining and refining copper wholly within that state, by purchases of stock and obtaining proxies from other stockholders, secured voting control of a majority of the stock of another similar corporation operating adjoining mines, and purposed to use such control to place in its directory a majority from its own board of officers, all of which it had the right to do under the laws of the state, did not directly or necessarily affect interstate or foreign commerce, and such control is not of itself illegal as a combination in restraint of such trade or commerce in violation of this Act, in the absence of evidence of an unlawful intent to so use it as to bring about the prohibited restraint or monopoly, and not in a lawful way in the interest of an economical management of both companies. Bigelow v. Calumet, etc., Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 721, affirming (1908) 167 Fed. 704. Compare Bigelow v. Calumet, etc., Min. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 869.

Combination between corporation and agent.—A combination between a corporation and its officer or agent in violation of the Anti-trust Act cannot be formed by the thoughts or acts of the officer or agent alone, without the conscious participation in it of any other officer or agent of the corporation. Union Pac. Coal Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 737.

Combination of drug trade associations.—Three national associations of persons interested in the drug trade—the Proprietors' Association of America, composed of manufacturers of proprietary medicines, the National Wholesale Druggists' Association, and the National Association of Retail Druggists—joined in the adoption of a so-called "tripartite agreement," the purpose of which was to maintain the retail prices of patent or proprietary medicines, and which provided that wholesalers should refrain from selling such medicines at any price to "aggressive cutters" of prices, or brokers; an aggressive cutter being defined as a dealer who was so designated by seventy-five per cent. of the local trade at any given place. Pursuant to such concerted plan, to which all were bound, and to carry it into effect, the proprietors thereafter sold only at fixed and uniform prices to those wholesalers who agreed to maintain prices and not to sell to aggressive cutters or brokers, in accordance with a list furnished by a committee of the wholesalers' association, while the list of aggressive cutters was furnished by the secretary of the retailers' association. If a wholesaler violated such agreement, and sold to an aggressive cutter, he was at once reported, and his name added to that list, and notice of the fact to all retailers who were members, with a suggestion that they act for the protection of their interest. If he was reinstated, a second notice of that fact was sent. It was held that such concerted plan and action constituted a combination and conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of the anti-trust law. Jayne v. Loder, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 21, 9 Ann. Cas. 294.

Combination of window glass manufacturers.—A declaration alleged that the defendant corporation was engaged in purchasing and contracting for the purchase of window glass from the manufacturers for certain named jobbers and wholesale dealers doing business in different states, who owned practically all of defendant's stock and controlled it; that such dealers comprised over seventy-five per cent. of all those in the United States, and sold more than seventy-five per cent. of the window glass sold therein; that up to a certain date they were uncombined, and competed freely with each other and with other wholesale dealers, but that on such date the defendant entered into a combination and agreement with them and with a manufacturer who owned and operated factories in different states and manufactured seventy per cent. of all the window glass made in the United States, by which defendant and such dealers agreed to buy window glass from no other manufacturer unless at materially lower prices, and such manufacturer agreed to sell to no other dealers except at higher prices than it charged them; that such agreement further limited the quantity of window glass to be purchased by each of such dealers to such as should be arbitrarily fixed by defendant and the manufacturer, and also gave them the power to arbitrarily fix excessive and unreasonable prices which were to be charged retail dealers, which prices such wholesale dealers agreed to observe under penalty of fines to be assessed against and paid by them; that it further restricted and limited the territory within which each of such dealers should sell to retail dealers, the object and effect of such combination and agreement being to restrain interstate commerce in window glass, to destroy competition therein, and to practically monopolize the same, especially in the better grades, which were practically all made by such manufacturer. It was held that the declaration charged a contract or combination in restraint of interstate commerce, in violation of the Anti-trust Act. Wheeler-Stenzel Co. v. National Window Glass Jobbers Assoc., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 864.

An association of window glass jobbers, for the purpose of appointing a common agent to make purchases of window glass for them and to distribute it among them according to contracts severally entered into by them with such agent, was not, even though one of the objects of the combination was to avoid competition among the members with each other in the market for window glass, illegal as a combination in restraint of trade, either at common law or under the Sherman Act. Wheeler-Stenzel Co. v. American Window Glass Co., (1909) 202 Mass. 471, 89 N. E. 29.

Combination of coal producers.—In U. S. v. Reading Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 427, it appeared that for many years small producers of coal in the anthracite regions of Pennsylvania had sold their product to contiguous large operators, who took it at the breakers and shipped and marketed the same through their own agencies, paying to the sellers therefor a certain percentage of tide-water prices, differing under certain contracts. During a general strike of all anthracite miners, at a conference between the producers, in order to induce the selling operators to assent to a settlement by which all miners were to receive increased pay, the purchasing companies agreed to contract with the selling producers under an agreed form of contract by which the purchaser bought the entire product of the seller's mines, to be mined and delivered as the buyer directed, which is agreed should be the seller's just proportion of all the anthracite coal which the requirements of the market might from time to time demand. The purchasers were also to pay an increased percentage based on the general average price at tide-water during the month, to be determined by an expert accountant. The making of such a contract was optional with each seller; but several were made, and the accountant made reports which were furnished to all parties interested, and also published in trade journals. It was held that such agreement did not constitute nor evidence a combination or conspiracy on the part of the purchasing companies to restrain or monopolize the sale or control the price of coal in interstate commerce in violation of this Act, but was the legitimate outgrowth of peculiar business conditions and was to the advantage of the smaller producers by utilizing for the handling of their product the facilities and agencies of the larger companies.

Combination of railroads.—In 1901 the Union Pacific Railroad Company bought stock of the Southern Pacific Company, which gave it practically a controlling interest, and the United States brought suit to enjoin the voting of such stock, on the ground that its acquisition was for the purpose of suppressing competition between the two companies in interstate commerce, and of monopolizing such commerce or a part thereof, in violation of this Act. At that time the Southern Pacific Company owned and operated a steamship line between New York and New Orleans, and rail lines from the latter place to the Pacific Coast, and by way of San Francisco to Portland, Ore. It also owned and operated the line of the Central Pacific Railroad Company between San Francisco and Ogden, Utah, from which point it connected eastward with the line of the Union Pacific and also with another competing line. The main line of the Union Pacific extended from Omaha to Ogden, with a branch from Kansas City westward to a connection with the main line. It also, through subsidiary companies, owned and operated a line from a connection with its main line, to Portland, and from there operated steamship lines to the Orient and to San Francisco. For through freight for the Pacific Coast originating east of its Missouri river terminals it was dependent on other roads, with which it there connected, and practically all of such freight for San Francisco was forwarded from Ogden over the Central Pacific line, 800 miles long, for which the Southern Pacific received about four-tenths of all the freight from Omaha or Kansas City westward. The rail and water line of the Union Pacific from Ogden to San Francisco by way of Portland was 1,700 miles long, its steamer service was irregular and the amount of freight sent that way was negligible. The two companies were competitors to a small extent for Oriental business, for business from the Atlantic seaboard to Portland and vicinity, and also through branches and connecting lines to and from other common points; but the total amount of such competitive business done by the Southern Pacific during the year ending in 1901 amounted to only 0.88 per cent. of its entire tonnage, and that done by the Union Pacific but 3.10 per cent. of its entire tonnage. While the Union Pacific maintained agents in the east to solicit business, it was chiefly from connecting carriers, and it received little more in freights for such business than did the Southern Pacific. It was held that the two roads were not substantial competitors for interstate or foreign business, in such sense that the purchase of the stock by the Union Pacific, for the purpose of giving it an assured connection with San Francisco, which it could control, constituted a direct restraint upon such commerce, in violation of the Act. U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 104.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company, through a subsidiary company, had projected and partly built a line of road between Salt Lake City and Los Angeles, when a controversy arose over a portion of the right of way through the mountains, between that company and another, which also desired to build a road between the same points, which was finally settled by an agreement to unite and build a road in which each party should own a half interest, with a further agreement respecting rates on through business. The Union Pacific Company at that time owned a controlling interest in the Southern Pacific Company, which owned and operated a line through Los Angeles to San Francisco, and one from there to Ogden, near Salt Lake City. It was held that the new line, which was direct, and much more serviceable and convenient for the public, was not a natural competitor of the Southern Pacific Company, with respect to business between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City, in such sense as to constitute the agreement under which it was built a combination in restraint of interstate commerce, in violation of section 1, nor was it unlawful thereunder on the ground that it prevented the building of two lines instead of one, it appearing that there was but one practicable route through the mountains, over which it was not feasible to construct two lines, nor because of the minor and incidental provisions relating to the exchange of business. U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 104.

The purchase by one railroad company of the stock of another by issuing and exchanging its own stock therefor, both roads being at the time carriers of anthracite coal from Pennsylvania to New York harbor, but chiefly from different localities, was held not to constitute a combination in restraint of interstate commerce in such coal, unlawful under this section, it appearing that the main object of the consolidation was the betterment of the terminal facilities of both roads at New York city and harbor, which were largely improved thereby to the benefit of the public, and that their competition in the coal carrying business was slight, and the effect, if any, on such competition incidental. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 427.

Combination of powder manufacturers.—In 1872 seven of the largest manufacturers of powder and other explosives in the United States organized what was called the "Gunpowder Trade Association," which, at its meetings and through committees, fixed prices which the constituent members were required to observe under penalty of fines. It also apportioned territory between its members, authorized the cutting of prices in particular localities in order to drive competitors out of the market or force them to come into the association, and apportioned the losses, if any, from such price cutting, between the members. Subsequently other companies were taken into the association, until there were seventeen members; and it was continued with some changes in the fundamental agreement, but none in its purposes or methods, until 1902. At that time E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., then the most influential member of the association, passed under a new management, was reorganized into the E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Company, and its controlling stockholders and officers inaugurated the policy of acquiring the assets of other corporations and vesting ownership of their plants and the control of their business in their own company. So successfully was this policy carried out, by the use of the methods of the association, that within five years such company had acquired the stock of and caused to be dissolved sixty-four corporations engaged in the manufacture of powder and other explosives, and controlled from sixty-four to 100 per cent. of the trade of the United States in the different kinds of explosives sold, and also, directly or through subsidiary corporations, as stockholders, controlled all of the other members of the association, which was then dissolved. It was held that the formation of such a corporation and its subsidiaries and the adoption of the new policy was merely the continuance in a different form of the illegal association, and that it constituted a combination in restraint of interstate commerce and to monopolize a part of the same which was unlawful under the Anti-trust Act. U. S. v. Du Pont de Nemours, (1911) 188 Fed. 127.

Combination of packing houses.—An indictment alleging facts which show that the defendants control three extensive packing concerns doing an interstate business and controlling the larger part of the business in the states in which they operate; that they have combined together in a plan to eliminate competition between such concerns by an agreement not to bid against each other for live stock, but to bid exactly the same amounts for like grades; and by fixing a uniform selling price to be charged by each, and appropriating among themselves the total business done according to the financial interest of each—charges a contract combination or conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of this section. U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 188 Fed. 92.

A combination of shipowners to prevent competition between members by maintaining uniform freight rates in South African trade, and to eliminate the possibility of competition with other lines by requiring shippers to pay forfeit money in case they patronized other lines, constituted a combination in restraint of competition and foreign commerce, in contravention of the federal anti-trust statute. Thomsen v. Union Castle Mail Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 251.

Organization of brokerage company by mercantile jobbers.—The organization by a number of mercantile jobbers located in the same city of a brokerage company of which they owned the stock, and the purchase of merchandise required by them from manufacturers and jobbers in other states through such company instead of through other brokers previously patronized, although there was no agreement binding them to do so, and the use of their influence to extend its business, did not constitute a combination or conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade or commerce, or to monopolize the same, in violation of sections 1 and 2, but was a legitimate and lawful business enterprise. Arkansas Brokerage Co. v. Dunn, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 899.

Corner of cotton market.—Since the operation of a scheme to corner the cotton market and thereby raise the price of cotton for the purpose of compelling a settlement by short speculators at an abnormally high price does not directly affect or restrain interstate commerce, there being no direct relation between prices and such commerce, an indictment alleging a conspiracy to run a cotton corner without any alleged intent to obstruct interstate commerce did not charge a violation of Sherman Anti-Trust Act. U. S. v. Patten, (1911) 187 Fed. 664.

Jurisdiction of federal courts.—A suit based on an alleged violation of Sherman Anti-trust Act, whereby direct and special injuries are inflicted on and threatened to the complainants, is one arising under a law of the United States of which a federal court has jurisdiction regardless of the citizenship of the parties. Mannington v. Hocking Valley R. Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 133.

Indictment—Definiteness and certainty.—An indictment for a combination in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of this section, between defendants as representatives of three different packing concerns, which charges that each concern was represented by certain individuals, each one of whom was authorized to act for the others of his "group" and that the word "group" as used therein is intended to apply to any or all of the members of the particular group, is sufficiently specific where it charges that acts were done by a particular group, without averring that each particular member of such group individually took part therein. U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 188 Fed. 92. See also U. S. v. American Naval Stores Co., (1909) 186 Fed. 592.

Duplicity.—An indictment charging a combination in restraint of interstate commerce is not bad for duplicity because it charges and enumerates different means adopted or different things done to accomplish the object of the combination. U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 188 Fed. 92.

Allegation that acts constitute contract combination or conspiracy.—An indictment which charges acts constituting a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of section 1 is good whether such acts are alleged to constitute a contract, combination, or conspiracy. U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 188 Fed. 92.

Charging officers of corporation as individuals.—An indictment for a combination in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of section 1, which charges that the defendants were officers of certain corporations which they managed and controlled, directing the corporate action, and that the groups of defendants representing the several corporations combined together to do the illegal acts, sufficiently charges the defendants as individuals. U. S. v. Swift, (1911) 188 Fed. 92.

Overt acts.—Congress by this Act having employed the words "conspiracy" and "conspire" without words of limitation, in creating offenses affecting interstate commerce, did not provide, as in the general conspiracy statute (R. S. sec. 5440, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 247), that overt acts shall be necessary to complete the offense, and hence counts in an indictment for conspiracy to monopolize interstate trade and commerce in violation of the anti-trust law are not demurrable for failure to allege overt acts, since the unlawful agreement, and not the overt acts, constitutes the crime of conspiracy at common law. U. S. v. Patten, (1911) 187 Fed. 664.

Joinder of defendants.—In an indictment under the anti-trust law, the offenses thereunder being made misdemeanors, all who aid in their commission may be charged as principals, and a corporation and its officers, who personally participate in committing the same, may be joined as defendants, although their acts may have been separate and not done at the same time. U. S. v. MacAndrews, etc., Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 823.

Subpoena duces tecum.—The protection against unreasonable searches and seizures afforded by U. S. Const., 4th Amend., cannot ordinarily be invoked to justify the refusal of an officer of a corporation to produce its books and papers in obedience to a subpoena duces tecum issued in aid of an investigation by a grand jury of an alleged violation of the Anti-trust Act by such corporation. Hale

v. Henkel, (1906) 201 U. S. 43, 26 S. Ct. 371, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 652.

Scope of subpoena.—A corporation charged with a violation of this Act is entitled to immunity under U. S. Const., 4th Amend., from such an unreasonable search and seizure as the compulsory production before a grand jury, under a subpoena duces tecum, of all understandings, contracts, or correspondence between such corporation and six other companies, together with all reports and accounts rendered by such companies from the date of the organization of the corporation, as well as all letters received by that corporation since its organization, from more than one dozen different companies, situated in seven different states. Hale v. Henkel, (1906) 201 U. S. 43, 26 S. Ct. 371, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 652. See also In re American Sugar Refining Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 108.

Limitations.—A conspiracy to restrain or monopolize trade, in violation of the Sherman Act, by obtaining control of a competitor through a pledge of the majority of its stock to secure a loan to a stockholder, and then voting to suspend business until further order of the board of directors, was held to continue, so far as the statute of limitations was concerned, so long as any further action was taken in furtherance of the conspiracy. U. S. v. Kissel, (1910) 218 U. S. 601, 31 S. Ct. 124, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1168.

For other cases under this section, see Fonotopia Limited v. Bradley, (1909) 171 Fed. 957; Getz v. Federal Salt Co., (1905) 147 Cal. 115, 81 Pac. 416.

Vol. VII, p. 340, sec. 2.

Additional notes.—Many of the notes under section 1, supra, are also applicable to this section, as in a majority of the cases a violation of both sections is alleged.

Trade and commerce are monopolized within this Act, when, as a result of efforts to that end, a few persons acting together obtain power to control the price of a commodity moving in interstate commerce, though such power is not exercised, its existence being sufficient. U. S. v. Patten, (1911) 187 Fed. 664.

Monopoly need not be complete.—It is not necessary that restraint of interstate trade and commerce should be so complete as to amount to total destruction in order to constitute a violation of this Act. U. S. v. MacAndrews, etc., Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 823; Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 774.

The size of a business alone does not constitute a "monopoly" in restraint of interstate commerce, in violation of section 2, but to render a combination illegal thereunder it must intentionally and necessarily prevent other persons from engaging in such business, thereby stifling competition. U. S. v. American Naval Stores Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 455; U. S. v. Reading Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 427.

hibited, but in order to be within the Act, the contract, combination, or conspiracy must be in itself in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations, or, if a monopoly or attempted monopoly or combination or conspiracy to monopolize, it must be of some part of the trade or commerce among the several states or foreign nations. U. S. Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 701.

Individual acts.—An indictment against operators of a cotton corner for alleged violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Law charged that defendants had conspired to monopolize a part of the trade and commerce among the several states by becoming members of and engaging in an unlawful combination in the form of an agreement by which they were severally to purchase cotton to such an extent that, together, they would have enough to enable them to control the price of such cotton, and severally to demand arbitrary, excessive, and monopolistic prices for the same on the sale thereof by them respectively to spinners and manufacturers other than such conspirators. It was held that since no monopoly exists when individuals, each acting for himself, own large quantities of a commodity, the indictment was fatally defective as alleging only a scheme to demand monopolistic prices as the

Sale only to exclusive purchasers.—A corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of pottery in a sister state, and member of a trust, contracted to sell and deliver pottery to a domestic corporation. The prices to be paid were regulated by the trust. The contract required the buyer, before being entitled to stipulated premiums, to confine its purchases of such goods for a period of one year to the seller, but there was no agreement whereby it forfeited any right on its failure to do so. It was held that the contract was not in restraint of trade, and was not in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act. Moroney Hardware Co. v. Goodwin Pottery Co., (Tex. 1909) 120 S. W. 1088.

Contracts and licenses as to patented articles.—A sale or license of a patented article, with a covenant not to compete, made as an ordinary incident to enhance the value of the thing conveyed, is not within this Act. Blount Mfg. Co. v. Yale, etc., Mfg. Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 555.

Use of a patented invention cannot be had except on the inventor's terms, and the requirement that a licensee join other licensees in a combination or pool to control the prices and output of an innocuous patented article is not a violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act. Patented articles, unless and until they are released by the owner of the patent from the dominion of his monopoly, are not articles of trade or commerce among the several states within the meaning of this Act, because they are not articles in which the people are entitled to freedom of trade. Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 358.

Since the public, by licenses to manufacture patented automobile tires, only secures the right to purchase the tires after they have been manufactured and offered for sale, and has no right to have the competition between the different licensees continued, a modification of the licenses between the owner of the patent and the various licensees regulating the manufacture and sale of such tires was not objectionable as a restraint of trade, in violation of this Act. Goshen Rubber Works v. Single Tube Automobile, etc., Tire Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 431.

A contract recited that the plaintiff, who was the patentee of an invention relating to brake beams, for the consideration of $10,000 to be paid him, had assigned to the defendant, which was a corporation engaged in the manufacture of brake beams, a certain patent and a pending application for a second, and provided that the plaintiff during the life of the patent should not become connected with any company manufacturing or selling brake beams in the United States, either as officer, employee, or shareholder, but reserved to him the right to terminate such part of the contract at any time by refunding the consideration paid him by defendant. It was held that such agreement to remain out of the brake-beam business did not render the contract unlawful as one in restraint of trade and competition or creating a monopoly, and that plaintiff could maintain an action thereon to recover the stipulated consideration. American Brake Beam Co. v. Pungs, (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 923.

In Indiana Mfg. Co. v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 365, it appeared that the complainant, which was the owner of a number of patents relating to pneumatic straw stackers, granted licenses to manufacturers of threshing machines by which they were given the right to use any or all inventions covered by such patents, and were required to sell stackers made thereunder at a stated price, and to pay complainant a royalty on each stacker so made and sold. They were also given the right to use the inventions covered by any other patents relating to the art which should thereafter be acquired by complainant, and it did afterward acquire the ownership of practically all patents relating to such stackers. It was held that such contracts were not in restraint of competition and in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, but were within complainant's right under the patent laws, although all of the manufacturers of threshing machines in the United States became licensees, there being no right in the public to free competition in articles covered by patents.

Contracts between manufacturers of liquid door checks under various patents, by which each agreed to restrict its own trade in the article of his own invention not as an incident to a grant of rights under patents, but to enhance the price by the removal of competition, and which constituted a general plan to regulate and control the business of dealing in such checks sold in interstate commerce, the plan comprehending the maintenance of price, the pooling of profits, the elimination of competition, and restraint of improvements, constituted a violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, and were therefore unenforceable. Blount Mfg. Co. v. Yale, etc., Mfg. Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 555.

Contracts regarding sale of proprietary medicines.—A restraint of trade which would be unlawful as to other manufactured articles cannot be justified because the article in question is a proprietary medicine made under a secret formula. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park, etc., Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 502.

Contracts between a manufacturer and all dealers whom he permits to sell his products, comprising most of the dealers in similar articles throughout the country, who fix the price for all sales, whether at wholesale or retail, operate as a restraint of trade, unlawful both at common law and as to interstate commerce, under the Anti-trust Act, even though such products may be proprietary medicine made under secret formulae. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park, etc., Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 502, affirming (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 803. Compare Jayne v. Loder, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 21, 9 Ann. Cas.

The exemption from the common-law rule against monopoly and restraint of trade, and the provisions of the federal Anti-trust Act, which has been extended to contracts affecting the sale and resale, the use or the price of articles made under a patent, or productions covered by a copyright, does not extend also to articles made under a secret process or medicine compounded under a private formula. John D. Park, etc., Co. v. Hartman (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 24.

The owner of a secret process or formula is not protected by law in his secret, but he may protect himself by contract against its disclosure by one to whom it is communicated in confidence, or restrict its use by such person, and such contracts are not in restraint of trade because of the character of the property right in the secret which would be destroyed by its disclosure, and because it is not itself an article of commerce, but such considerations do not apply to contracts for the sale of the manufactured product which do not involve a disclosure of the secret, and such contracts are within the rules against restraint of trade. John D. Park, etc., Co. v. Hartman, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 24.

Monopoly of oil business.—The combination of the stocks of the various corporations trading in petroleum and its products in the hands of a holding company, with the intent to exclude others from the trade, and thus centralize in the combination the perpetual control of the movement of these commodities in the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, was held to constitute a violation of the prohibitions of this Act. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1910) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 503, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177.

Monopoly of tobacco business.—The acquisition of dominion and control over the tobacco trade by a principal and accessory or subsidiary corporations as the result of purchasing numerous competitors, in many cases closing out the business when acquired, and of obtaining stock control of other competitors, as well as of concerns manufacturing the elements essential to the successful manufacture of tobacco products, brought about in many cases after a ruinous trade war, the parties in interest uniformly covenanting not to engage in the tobacco business, and the former business often continuing ostensibly as an independent concern, was held to violate the prohibitions of this Act against combinations in restraint of trade or commerce, or monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part thereof, whether looked at from the point of view of stock ownership, or from the standpoint of the principal and accessory or subsidiary corporations, viewed independently, including certain foreign corporations in so far as, by contracts made by them, they became co-operators in the combination. U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1910) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700.

Monopoly of sugar refining.—In Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co. v. American Sugar

Refining Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 254, it appeared that the plaintiff alleged that having been engaged in the purchase of raw sugar in different states, and in the transportation thereof to Pennsylvania, where it manufactured the same into refined sugar and sold it in interstate commerce, it suspended business during the Spanish war, and enlarged its refinery, preparing and intending to resume business, when defendants conspired to prevent it from engaging in business, and accomplished this result by inducing plaintiff's majority stockholder to accept a loan, pledging his stock as collateral with voting power, by which defendant elected new directors, who voted that plaintiff should do no business; that the object of such conspiracy was to prevent plaintiff from engaging in business in competition with defendant. It was held that the conspiracy alleged directly operated not alone on the manufacture of sugar within the state of Pennsylvania, but on interstate commerce in the transportation and delivery of both the raw material and the manufactured product, and was, therefore, within the federal Anti-trust Act.

Monopoly of milk business over particular railroad.—In Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Kutter, (1906) 147 Fed. 51, 77 C. C. A. 315, it appeared that the defendant railroad company entered into a contract with plaintiff for a term of years to build up, develop, and conduct the business of the transportation of milk on its line of road. The plaintiff was to have full charge of such business and was to receive as compensation a percentage of the freights earned therein. It was provided that he should charge rates not in excess of those charged by competitive roads, and should be granted the exclusive privilege of transporting milk over defendant's lines, "so far as it was permitted to do so by law." In the execution of the contract all rates were made by defendant, and plaintiff was not given a monopoly of the milk traffic. It was held that such contract was not in violation of the Anti-trust Act.

Indictment.—Since a conspiracy to monopolize is a conspiracy to create a monopoly, an indictment for conspiracy to monopolize interstate trade and commerce in cotton in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Law, was insufficient where it failed to show that the conspiracy, if successfully carried out, would have resulted in a monopoly. U. S. v. Patten, (1911) 187 Fed. 664.

Duplicity.—Under this section monopolizing and attempting to monopolize commerce are separate offenses and cannot be included in one count of an indictment. U. S. v. American Naval Stores Co., (1909) 186 Fed. 592.

Joinder of defendants.—A number of defendants may be charged jointly under this section with the crime of attempting to monopolize a part of interstate commerce. U. S. v. MacAndrews, etc., Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 823.

Sufficiency of evidence.—See U. S. v. Reading Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 427.

Vol. VII, p. 344, sec. 3.

Scope of section.—This section, prohibiting combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce in any territory of the United States, is not limited to combinations and conspiracies which operate in restraint of the trade of substantially an entire territory, but apply as well to a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in a single city in a territory. Tribollet v. U. S., (1908) 11 Ariz. 436, 95 Pac. 85.

The words "combination or conspiracy" as used in this section are synonymous, and hence an indictment alleging that defendants entered into a "combination or conspiracy" in restraint of trade was not duplicitous as alleging two distinct offenses. Tribollet v. U. S., (1908) 11 Ariz. 436, 95 Pac. 85.

Must be two or more persons or corporations.—"The union of two or more persons, the conscious participation in the scheme of two or more minds, is indispensable to an unlawful combination." Per Sanborn, J., in Union Pac. Coal Co. v. U. S., (1909) 173 Fed. 737, 97 C. C. A. 578. In a prosecution for violation of section 3, it was held that a conspiracy between two corporations cannot be formed by the acts and thoughts of one person acting as the agent of both corporations. Houston-Hart Lumber Co. v. Neal, (N. M. 1911) 113 Pac. 621.

Liability of officers of corporation.—Where the defendant and H. entered into a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade to control the meat business in Phoenix, Ariz., and for this purpose organized a corporation, the fact that the defendant acted merely as an officer and stockholder in such corporation, and that the corporation was held not guilty, was held not to prevent the defendant's conviction for violating this Act. Tribollet v. U. S., (1908) 11 Ariz. 436, 95 Pac. 85.

Combination of brewing companies.—A combination between several brewing companies forming a Brewers' Association, entered into for the purpose of preventing competition in the manufacture and sale of their product, fixing the price and controlling the disposition of the same to retail dealers, providing that its members shall not sell such product at prices fixed by themselves nor below prices fixed by the association, and allotting the business of selling the same among them, and prohibiting any of them from selling to customers allotted to another, is a trust or conspiracy in restraint of trade within this section, and an attempt to coerce another company to enter the trust and obey the regulations is an invasion of private right, as well as inimical to the interests of the public; and the purposes and practices of such a combination or conspiracy are equally violative of the common law, of which the third section of the statute is declaratory. Leonard v. Abner-Drury Brewing Co., (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 161.

Indictment.—The object of a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade being unlawful both at common law and by statute, an indictment therefor was not objectionable for failure to allege the means by which the combination or conspiracy was to be accomplished. Tribollet v. U. S., (1908) 11 Ariz. 436, 95 Pac. 85. See also U. S. v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 66.

Defects in form.—Where an indictment for combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of this section was uncertain as to some of its allegations, owing to the fact that the offense was first charged in the language of the statute, and the purposes and objects of the conspiracy were not fully stated until after the overt acts were described, the defect was one of form and not of substance, not prejudicial to defendant, and therefore immaterial under R. S. sec. 1025, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 340, providing that no indictment shall be quashed for a non-prejudicial defect or form. Tribollet v. U. S., (1908) 11 Ariz. 436, 95 Pac. 85.

Service of process on nonresident corporation.—Upon an indictment for conspiracy in restraint of trade under this section, the court has power, by virtue of R. S. sec. 716, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 498, which authorizes such courts to issue all writs "necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions," to issue process to another state to bring before it corporation defendants who are citizens of such state and cannot be found or served in the state or district of the indictment. U. S. v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 66.

Vol. VII, p. 344, sec. 4.

Jurisdiction and service of process.—The presence of one of the defendants in the federal district in which suit by the United States under this section is brought to restrain violations of this Act gives the Circuit Court jurisdiction, and justifies it in making an order under section 5, for the service of process upon all the other defendants, wherever they may be found. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 503, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177.

Parties.—A private party, who has sustained special injury by a violation of the federal Anti-trust Act, may sue in a federal court for injunction under the general equity jurisdiction of the court, where, by reason of diversity of citizenship of the parties, the court has jurisdiction of the suit. Bigelow v. Calumet, etc., Min. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 869.

To a suit under this section to restrain a violation of this Act by corporations alleged to constitute a combination in restraint of or to monopolize interstate commerce, mortgagees of such corporations are not necessary parties, but may be brought in if it appears that their interests will be affected by the decree. U. S. v. Du Pont de Nemours, (1911) 188 Fed. 127.

A minority stockholder in a corporation, who is not an officer and takes no part in the management of its business, is not subject to a suit for injunction under this section, because the corporation may be a party to a contract or combination to restrain or monopolize interstate commerce. U. S. v. Du Pont de Nemours, (1911) 188 Fed. 127.

Pleadings.—A proceeding cannot be sustained to set aside or restrain a sale of a corporation's assets to another company under the Anti-trust Act, unless it appears that the sale is in furtherance of an intent, and is alleged with proper details, in violation of the statute. Binney v. Cumberland Ely Copper Co., (1910) 183 Fed. 650.

Evidence, whether documentary or oral, sought to be elicited from witnesses summoned in an action brought by the United States to enjoin an alleged conspiracy by manufacturers of paper to suppress competition, in violation of this Act, by creating a general selling and distributing agent, is material, where it would tend to establish the manner in which such agent executed its functions. Nelson v. U. S., (1906) 201 U. S. 92, 26 S. Ct. 358, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 673.

Combinations may be enjoined if the objects of the association are such as to violate this Act. Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 774.

Dissolution of combination.—Where an existing combination in corporate form has been adjudged unlawful, as in violation of Anti-trust Act, and to have monopolized and to be monopolizing a large part of the interstate trade in a particular commodity, it is the duty of the court, under the power conferred by this section, not only to enjoin further violation of the Act, but to render its decree effective by dissolving the illegal combination. U. S. v. Du Pont de Nemours, (1911) 188 Fed. 127.

Injunction pending final dissolution.—Pending the working out of a plan for dissolving a combination found to control the tobacco industry in violation of the Anti-trust Act, and for re-creating out of the elements composing it a condition which would not be repugnant to the prohibitions of the Act, it was held that each and all of such elements should be restrained from doing any act which might further extend or enlarge the power of the combination by any means or device whatsoever. U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700.

Injunction after withdrawal from combination.—A member of a combination in restraint of interstate commerce, in violation of this Act, who has in good faith withdrawn from such combination, is not subject to a suit for injunction under section 4; nor, if such member is a corporation, is the fact that a minority part of its stock is owned by members of the combination sufficient to sustain such a suit, in the absence of proof that such ownership is employed to aid the combination. U. S. v. Du Pont de Nemours, (1911) 188 Fed. 127.

company of a majority of the stock of another company operating a competing line affords no ground for the granting of an injunction under this section, where such stock was sold prior to the suit. U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 104.

Hearing on manner of dissolution.—To give effective force to a decree of the federal Supreme Court adjudging that a combination controlling the tobacco industry offended against this Act, the court below was directed to hear the parties, by evidence or otherwise, as it might deem proper, for the purpose of ascertaining and determining upon some plan or method of dissolving the combination, and of re-creating, out of the elements composing it, a new condition which would not be repugnant to the law. U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700.

Receivers.—A receiver will not, in the first instance, be appointed to take charge of the assets and property of a combination controlling a particular industry, in violation of this Act, for the purpose of preventing a continued violation of the law, and thus working out, by a sale of the property of the combination or otherwise, a condition which will be repugnant to the prohibitions of the Act, since the extensive power which would result from at once resorting to a receivership might not only do grievous injury to the public, but also cause widespread and perhaps irreparable loss to many innocent persons. U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700.

Time for compliance with decree of dissolution.—In Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 503, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177, it was held that the magnitude of the interests involved and their complexity required that six months be given in which to execute a decree for the dissolution of a holding company controlling the oil industry in violation of the Anti-trust Act, and for the transfer back to the stockholders of the subsidiary corporations of the stock which had been turned over to the holding company in exchange for its own stock.

In U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700, it was held that six months, with a possible extension of sixty days, should be given in which to work out a plan for dissolving a combination found to control the tobacco industry, in violation of the Anti-trust Act, and re-creating out of the elements composing it a condition which would not be repugnant to the prohibitions of the Act.

Effect of dissolution.—Power to make normal and lawful contracts or agreements is not taken from the stockholders of the subsidiary corporations, or the corporations themselves, by a decree for the dissolution of a holding company found to offend against the Anti-trust Act, which enjoins such stockholders and corporations from in any way conspiring to violate the statute, or from monopolizing or attempting to monopolize in virtue of their stock ownership, and prohibits all agreements between them tending to produce or bring about further violations of the statute, but such decree merely restrains them from, by any device whatever, re-creating, directly or indirectly, the illegal combination which the decree dissolves. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177.

Extent of relief.—The relief to be granted where a combination has been found to violate the prohibitions of this Act against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, and monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part thereof, should be dictated by the duty of giving complete and efficacious effect to such prohibitions, the accomplishment of this result with as little injury as possible to the interests of the general public, and a proper regard for the vast interests of private property which may have become vested in many persons as the result of the acquisition of stock or securities of the combination without any guilty knowledge or intent. U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversed (1908) 164 Fed. 700.

The possible serious injury to the public from an absolute cessation of interstate commerce in petroleum and its products by the agencies embraced in a holding company controlling the oil industry, in violation of the Anti-trust Act, required that upon dissolving the holding company, the subsidiary corporations should not be enjoined from carrying on interstate commerce until the dissolution of the combination should be effected in accordance with the decree, by the transfer back to the stockholders of the subsidiary corporations of the stock which had been turned over to the holding company in exchange for its own stock. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 177.

The injury which might be inflicted upon the public by staying interstate commerce in tobacco and its products by a combination controlling the tobacco industry in violation of the Anti-trust Act was held to forbid the allowance, in the first instance, of a permanent injunction restraining the combination as a whole, and all the individuals and corporations which form a part of or co-operate in it in any manner or form, from continuing to engage in interstate commerce until the illegal situation is cured. U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 31 S. Ct. 632, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 663, reversing (1908) 164 Fed. 700.

Vol. VII, p. 345, sec. 7.

Who may sue.—Under the express terms of section 7, one injured in business or property by another through a combination or conspiracy to restrain or monopolize interstate trade may sue for his damages. Wheeler-Stenzel Co. v. National Window Glass Jobbers' Assoc., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 864; Ware-Kramer Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 160.

Stockholders.—This section does not give a right of action to a stockholder or creditor of a corporation by reason of a combination or conspiracy alleged to have been in violation of the Act and to have caused the bankruptcy of the corporation resulting in the loss of plaintiff's stock or debt; the right of action in such case being in the corporation or its trustee in bankruptcy. Loeb v. Eastman Kodak Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 704.

In Ames v. American Telephone, etc., Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 820, the declaration alleged that the T. Telegraph Co., in which the plaintiff was a stockholder, was organized to operate an independent system throughout the United States, after which the defendant company secured control of the T. Company by the purchase of its stock, to prevent competition in interstate telephone traffic, which it had planned to carry on. The defendant since so managed the T. Company as not to develop its business, but to prevent it from doing business, and suppressed competition, until the T. Company was forced into the hands of a receiver. By such control the defendant had monopolized interstate telephone commerce, and thereby rendered worthless plaintiff's stock in the T. Company, which prior thereto had been worth fifteen dollars a share. On demurrer it was held an injury to the corporation, and not to the stockholders of the T. Company, and that the plaintiff could not therefore sue in his own name to recover treble damages under this section.

Municipal corporation.—The action for threefold damages for injury to "business or property" authorized by this section may be maintained by a municipal corporation against the foreign corporate members of a combination forbidden by this Act, where the municipality was led, by reason of the illegal combination, to purchase from a corporation at an excessive price the iron pipe needed for its waterworks system. Chattanooga Foundry, etc., Works v. Atlanta, (1906) 203 U. S. 390, 27 S. Ct. 65, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 241.

Pleading.—Where a complaint, under this section, to recover treble damages for a combination in restraint of foreign commerce, alleged that plaintiffs were coerced by defendants' unlawful combination to pay a sum in addition to a reasonable freight rate, which was held subject to forfeiture in case plaintiffs shipped by other lines or their consignees received freight by other lines, and also contained general allegations of damage, it sufficiently alleged that plaintiffs had suffered damage by a violation of the Act. Thomsen v. Union Castle Mail Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 251.

or combination in restraint of interstate trade and commerce, owing to the complicated nature of the case and the numerous elements which may enter into such a conspiracy, the plaintiff must be given liberal latitude in his pleading, and matter will not be stricken from his complaint on motion under a state statute as "irrelevant and redundant," unless it is clearly so; but matter which is manifestly purely evidentiary will be stricken out. Ware-Kramer Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 117.

A petition to recover threefold damages for injury to the plaintiff's business in interstate and foreign commerce, under this section, states a cause of action, where it alleges that the plaintiff was a manufacturer of tobacco which it sold in interstate and foreign commerce, and facts showing that the defendants conspired to render its business unprofitable and ruin and destroy the same through competing corporations, which they secretly controlled, by enticing away its workmen, by compelling it to pay more than the normal price for leaf tobacco, and to adopt unnecessary and expensive means to sell its products, and that such conspiracy was carried out to the damage of plaintiff in a sum stated; such acts constituting both a conspiracy to restrain interstate commerce and an attempt to monopolize the same, in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Act. People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 396.

For other cases dealing with the sufficiency of the pleadings under this section, see Loewe v. Lawlor, (1905) 142 Fed. 216; Wheeler-Stenzel Co. v. National Window Glass Jobbers' Assoc., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 864; Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 774; Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 254; Ware-Kramer Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 160; Hale v. O'Connor Coal, etc., Co., (1908) 181 Fed. 267; Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 548.

Using language of statute. — In an action under this section, to recover damages for injury alleged to have been caused to plaintiff by reason of contracts made by defendant in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations, and an attempt by the defendant to monopolize such trade or commerce, or a part thereof, in violation of said Act, it is not sufficient to frame the declaration in the language of the statute, but the nature and substance of the contracts relied upon, and the substantial facts alleged to constitute an attempt at monopoly, must be pleaded to enable the court to determine whether they are in violation of the statute, and to enable the defense to properly prepare to meet the charge. Cilley v. United Shoe Mach. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 726.

Definiteness and certainty. — A declaration in an action brought under section 7 of this Act, to recover damages for a violation of section 1 of the Act, was held bad for indefiniteness and uncertainty in describing the alleged combination and conspiracy entered into by defendant and the acts done which resulted in damage to plaintiff. Rice v. Standard Oil Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 464.

Duplicity. — Section 1 of this Act makes a distinction between a contract and a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade, and a declaration in a suit based on section 7, to recover damages resulting to plaintiff from a violation of such provision, which alleges in a single count that defendant entered into a "contract, combination, and conspiracy" in restraint of trade, is bad for duplicity. Rice v. Standard Oil Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 464.

Joinder of members of separate combinations. — See Jayne v. Loder, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 21, 9 Ann. Cas. 294.

Measure of damages. — Where as a result of conspiracy or combination in restraint of interstate commerce, prohibited by this Act, a person is injured by being compelled to pay a higher price for any article affected thereby than he would otherwise be compelled to pay, he may recover treble the amount of the damages sustained. Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 774.

Jury trial. — An action by a shipper, authorized by this section, to recover treble damages to his business and property by reason of a conspiracy and combination by interstate carriers to charge excessive and unlawful rates for the shipment of coal from the mines to tide water, was an action at law as to which the parties were entitled to a jury trial. Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 354.

In an action to charge certain defendants, as members of various local unions of a labor organization, with liability for acts of agents of the organization on the ground of a combination in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of section 1, where there was conflicting testimony as to their knowledge of such acts and other evidence from which inferences must be drawn, it was held that question of liability was for the jury, and that it was error to withdraw such question from them and to submit only the question of damages. Lawlor v. Loewe, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 522.

Damages for excessive or unreasonable railroad rates. — This Act does not give any right of action for damages sustained by the payment of excessive, unjust, or unreasonable rates of interstate carriers, such relief being provided for by the Interstate Commerce Act. Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 354.

Evidence. — In an action by a manufacturer doing an interstate business against members of a labor organization to charge them with liability under this section, one of the violations of the Act charged being that the defendants combined to prevent customers of plaintiff in other states from buying his goods by means of threats or boycott, etc., testimony of the plaintiff's salesmen that customers told them of such threats, made by persons claiming to represent defendant organization, was incompetent as hearsay.

Lawlor v. Loewe, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 522.

In Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 115, the evidence was held to be insufficient to establish a combination or conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade or commerce between two defendants, each of whom brought a suit against plaintiff for infringement of a different patent, which would sustain an action by plaintiff for treble damages under this section.

Limitation.—The limitation of five years prescribed by R. S. sec. 1047, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 100, for any "suit or prosecution for any penalty or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise, accruing under the laws of the United States," does not apply to the action for the threefold damages for injury to "business or property," authorized by this section. Chattanooga Foundry, etc., Works v. Atlanta, (1906) 203 U. S. 390, 27 S. Ct. 95, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 241.

The ten years limitation prescribed by the Tenn. Code, sec. 2776, for "all other cases not expressly provided for," rather than the one year limitation prescribed by section 2772 for "statute penalties," or the three years limitation prescribed by section 2773 for injuries to personal or real property, was held to govern an action for threefold damages for injury to "business or property" brought in the federal courts sitting in Tennessee, under the Anti-trust Act, in which the right of recovery was based on the excessive price for iron water pipe which a municipality was led to pay by reason of an illegal arrangement between the members of a trust or combination formed in violation of that Act. Chattanooga Foundry, etc., Works v. Atlanta, (1906) 203 U. S. 390, 27 S. Ct. 95, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 241.

Liability of members of labor union.—Members of a labor organization to destroy an existing interstate traffic in hats, by preventing the manufacturers, through the instrumentality of a boycott, from manufacturing hats intended for transportation beyond the state, and to prevent their vendees in other states from reselling the hats so transported, and from further negotiating with the manufacturers for the purchase and transportation of such hats from the place of manufacture to the various places of destination, were held to be liable for the threefold damages which, under this section, may be recovered by those injured in business or property by violations of the Act, although a negligible amount of interstate business was affected in carrying out the combination, and although the members of the combination were not themselves engaged in interstate commerce. Loewe v. Lawlor, (1908) 208 U. S. 301, 28 S. Ct. 301, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 488.

Necessity for injury to existing business.—In order to state a cause of action for damages for conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce under the federal Anti-trust Act, it is not necessary to allege injury to an existing business, though it is necessary to state facts showing an intention and preparedness to engage in business, it being as unlawful to prevent a person from engaging in business as it is to drive one out of business. Thomsen v. Union Castle Mail Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 251; American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., (1908) 166 Fed. 261, affirmed (1909) 213 U. S. 347, 29 S. Ct. 511, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 826.

Where the plaintiff company, in a suit to recover treble damages under this section, alleged that it had been engaged in interstate commerce, but had temporarily ceased business and enlarged its refinery at large expense, and prepared and intended to resume business as before, but had been prevented from doing so by defendant's alleged acts, the complaint was not demurrable as showing that plaintiff was not engaged in business and had no established business to injure at the time of the conspiracy. Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 254.

Defendant's prior acts and conduct.—In an action for damages to plaintiff by the defendant's alleged combination to monopolize or attempt to monopolize interstate commerce in tobacco, defendant's acts and conduct prior to plaintiff's organization and entering the business were immaterial as res inter alios acta. Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 774.

Necessary showing.—It is only necessary to support an action under such section that complainant's business or property has been in some way injured by reason of defendant's illegal scheme. Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 774.

Reasonableness.—In an action to recover treble damages caused by an unlawful combination in restraint of foreign commerce, in violation of the federal anti-trust statute, whether the restraint of trade caused by the combination was reasonable or unreasonable held to be immaterial. Thomsen v. Union Castle Mail Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 251; Ware-Kramer Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 160. These cases must be considered as overruled by Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 619.

Place of combination.—Where a combination in restraint of foreign commerce, in violation of the federal Anti-trust Act, was put in operation in the United States and affected her foreign commerce, it was not material to a suit by a person injured thereby that it was formed in a foreign country. Thomsen v. Union Castle Mail Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 252.

Acts done by a domestic corporation outside the United States, which largely depended for their efficiency upon the co-operation, in a conspiracy to drive a rival out of business, of soldiers and officials in Costa Rica, acting under governmental sanction, in territory over which that state exercises a de facto sovereignty, could not be made the basis of the action to recover threefold damages authorized by this section, on behalf of those injured in their business by reason of violations of this Act. American Banana

Production of books by corporation.—An action to recover treble damages under this section is penal in character, but such fact does not preclude the court from requiring the defendant, when a corporation, to produce books or writing under R. S. sec. 724, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 2. American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 943.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Vol. VII, p. 367, sec. 245.

Duties of assistant secretaries.—Under this section the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe the duties to be performed by the assistant secretaries; and under section 161 R. S. the first assistant is required, "in case of the death, resignation, or absence of the head of any department," to perform his duties, etc. It is clear from these provisions of the Revised Statutes that the Secretary of the Treasury can require the assistant secretary "to ascertain, determine, and declare" the net amount of the bounties which Germany paid on sugars, and to fix the amount to be collected on importations from that country. Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 743.

Vol. VII, p. 384, sec. 8.

The authority conferred upon the Comptroller of the Treasury by this section to decide questions involving payments to be made from the Treasury is complete; but the Act does not establish a rule which is universal and without exception. Congress did not, by this enactment, intend to shorten the reach of sections 354 and 356 of the Revised Statutes, or to repeal those sections pro tanto. (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 301.

Generally speaking, the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury is conclusive in cases involving the application of an appropriation and the expenditure of public moneys, and governs the auditing officers and himself in passing accounts under this section. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 609.

TREATIES.

Vol. VII, p. 420, art. VIII.

Suit to restrain an association from using name of Austria-Hungarian emperor on advertising matter.—Under the Austrian treaty of June 27, 1871, providing that consuls-general, consuls, vice-consuls, and consular agents of the two countries, in the exercise of their duties, may apply to the authorities within their district for the protection of the rights of their countrymen, it was held that the imperial and royal consul of Austria-Hungary was entitled to maintain a suit in the federal courts to restrain a Pennsylvania beneficial association from using the name of the Austria-Hungarian emperor as a part of its corporate name, and his portrait as a part of its advertising literature, for the false and fraudulent purpose of inducing subjects of the emperor resident in the United States to believe that the association is conducted under the customs of their home country, and that their emperor was identified with and a patron thereof. Von Thodorovich v. Franz Josef Beneficial Assoc., (1907) 154 Fed. 911.

Vol. VII, p. 427, art. I.

Forgery.—This article authorizing extradition of persons charged with forgery or utterance of forged papers was applicable where it appeared that written instruments had been falsely uttered by accused for fraud and deceit, and that the instruments were of such a description that they might defraud or deceive if issued with such intent. Ex p. Zentner, (1910) 188 Fed. 344.

Vol. VII, p. 479, art. VI.

Effect of subsequent treaties.—The treaty with China of 1868, as amended by the treaty of 1880, was in part suspended by the terms of the treaty of 1894 for a period of ten years, at the end of which time (China having given notice of its final termination), the treaty obligations between the United States and that empire were the same as they were immediately before the taking effect of that treaty. (1904) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 137.

Vol. VII, p. 484, art. II.

The "additional period" of one year provided by this article, beyond the period in which a registered Chinese laborer is required to return to this country, is only for such time as the disability therein mentioned continues, the extreme limit of such extension under any circumstances being one year. (1903) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 48.

Vol. VII, p. 518, art. II.

Time of taking effect of treaty.—The treaty between Cuba and the United States, signed Dec. 11, 1902, did not go into effect until Dec. 27, 1903, the date proclaimed by the President, and imports from Cuba entered prior to that date were not entitled to the twenty per cent. reduction provided for therein from the duties imposed by Tariff Act July 24, 1897, ch. 11, 30 Stat. L. 151, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 391. M. J. Dalton Co. v. U. S., (1907) 151 Fed. 143; U. S. v. M. J. Dalton Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 144. Contra Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1906) 144 Fed. 563.

Vol. VII, p. 519, art. VIII.

"Other countries"—Philippine Islands.—The Philippine Islands are not "another country" within the meaning of the provision of this article that the rates of duty granted to Cuba by that treaty, being a reduction of twenty per cent. from the rates prescribed by the Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. L. 151, ch. 11, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 391, or any tariff laws subsequently enacted, shall continue preferential in respect to all like imports from other countries. Faber v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 649, 31 S. Ct. 659, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 897.

Vol. VII, p. 560, art. XIII.

Extent of powers conferred on consuls.—This article, which gives the consular officers of each country exclusive power to determine differences between the captains and crews of vessels of their own nation, and prohibits the courts of the other country from interfering therein, does not expressly or by implication grant privileges or confer powers which exempt a German vessel employing seamen in a port of this country from the obligation to observe the restrictive provisions of section 24 of the Act of Dec. 21, 1898, ch. 28, 30 Stat. L. 763, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 871. The Neck, (1905) 138 Fed. 144.

Jurisdiction of admiralty courts.—This article does not deprive the admiralty courts of the United States of jurisdiction to determine the rights of an American seaman who enters and leaves the service of a German vessel within this country. The Neck, (1905) 138 Fed. 144; The Baker, (1907) 157 Fed. 485.

Vol. VII, p. 576, article the second.

Vol. VII, p. 584, art. X.

Sufficiency of complaint.—Under this article a complaint for the arrest and examination of an alleged offender is not required to set out the offense with the particularity of an indictment, but is sufficient if it conforms to the requirements of a preliminary complaint under the local law where the accused is found. In re Herskovitz, (1901) 136 Fed. 713.

For other notes, see under this title, vol. 7, p. 604, art. III.

Vol. VII, p. 603, art. I, par. 4.

Participation in fraud by agent or trustee.—Persons surrendered by Canada to the United States, under paragraphs 4 and 10 of this article, to be tried for the crime of "participation in fraud by an agent or trustee," were tried for such crime where the indictment charged them with conspiracy with a disbursing officer of the government to defraud the United States by presenting false and fraudulent claims to such officer and by his allowance and payment of the same from public money in his hands, the acts and transactions charged and proved before the extradition commissioner and under the indictment being the same. Greene v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 164 Fed. 401.

Description of offense.—An indictment charging a conspiracy to defraud the United States, between an officer and agent of the government and his codefendants, which sets out facts showing a corrupt agreement between the defendants and overt acts by means of which the purpose of such agreement was effected and the government defrauded, charges fraud by an agent and participation therein by the other defendants, within the meaning of clauses 4 and 10 of this article, and is sufficient to warrant their extradition for trial thereunder. U. S. v. Greene, (1906) 146 Fed. 766.

Vol. VII, p. 604, art. III.

Trial for offense committed after extradition.—Immunity from trial for offense committed by a person after his extradition, until he has been afforded an opportunity to return to the country whence he was extradited, was not given by the provisions of the treaties with Great Britain of Aug. 9, 1842, and July 12, 1889. Collins v. O'Neil, (1909) 214 U. S. 113, 29 S. Ct. 575, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 933 (affirming (1907) 151 Cal. 340, 90 Pac. 827, 91 Pac. 397), wherein the court said: "The question then is, Does either the treaty or convention, by express provision or by inference, provide for a return of the criminal to the surrendering country after his surrender, and after a subsequent commission of a crime in the country to which he was surrendered? To ask the question is to answer it. The plaintiff in error contends for the treaty right to leave the country, notwithstanding his commission of the subsequent crime. This we cannot assent to. It is impossible to conceive of representatives of two civilized countries solemnly entering into a treaty of extradition, and therein providing that a criminal surrendered according to demand, for a crime that he has committed, if, subsequently to his surrender, he is guilty of murder or treason or other crime, is nevertheless to have the right guaranteed to him to return unmolested to the country which surrendered him. We can imagine no country, by treaty, as desirous of exacting such a condition of surrender, or any country as willing to accept it. When a treaty or statute contains a provision that the party surrendered shall be tried for no other offense until he has had an opportunity to leave the country, the meaning of such a provision is perfectly plain, and must receive a reasonable and sensible construction. The party proceeded against must not be tried for any other offense existing at the time when he was extradited (whether, at the time of such extradition, it had or had not been discovered), until he shall have had a reasonable time to return to the country from which he was taken, after his trial or other termination of the proceeding. That such privilege should be accorded to one who commits a

Punishment under prior conviction of other offense than that for which extradited.—The omission of the words "or be punished" from the provision of this article that no person extradited "shall be triable or be tried" for any crime or offense committed prior to his extradition, other than the offense for which he was surrendered, until he shall have had opportunity of returning to the country from which he was surrendered, does not justify the imprisonment, upon a former conviction for another and different offense, of a person extradited from Canada for an offense against the United States, until he has had an opportunity to return to Canada—especially where extradition had been refused for the other offense, since this omission is inadequate to overcome the positive provisions of R. S. secs. 5272, 5275, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 77, 78, and the otherwise manifest scope and object of the treaty, and the earlier Ashburton treaty of 1842, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 582, which are to limit imprisonment as well as the trial to the crime for which extradition has been demanded and granted. Johnson v. Browne, (1907) 205 U. S. 309, 27 S. Ct. 539, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 816.

Prosecution for subsequent offense before trial for offense for which extradited.—An extradited person is given no right to have the trial of the offense for which he was extradited brought to a conclusion before he can be tried for an offense subsequently committed by the provisions of the treaties with Great Britain of Aug. 9, 1842, and July 12, 1889, under which he is entitled to a reasonable time to return to the country whence he was extradited before he can be tried for another offense committed prior to his extradition. Collins v. O'Neil, (1909) 214 U. S. 113, 29 S. Ct. 575, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 933, affirming (1907) 151 Cal. 340, 90 Pac. 827, 91 Pac. 397.

Vol. VII, p. 654, art. I.

Judicial determination of treaty.—In Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880, it was held that the court may not declare that this treaty between the United States and Italy is abrogated merely because Italy refuses to surrender its subjects committing crimes in the United States and then fleeing to Italy, where the United States has dealt with the treaty as subsisting, and has honored the requisition of the Italian government for the surrender of its citizens.

Sufficiency of evidence.—This article which provides for extradition from one country to the other of persons charged with crime in the demanding country, "provided that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found would justify his or her apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime had been there committed," does not warrant the return to Italy of a person there charged with murder, where the only evidence presented of his connection with the offense is hearsay. Ex p. Fudera, (1908) 162 Fed. 591.

Citizens and subjects of contracting parties.—The word "persons" in this treaty, providing for the surrender of persons charged with enumerated crimes, is sufficiently broad to embrace citizens and subjects of the contracting parties, and a citizen of the United States who while in Italy commits an offense, and who then flees to the United States, is within the treaty and may be extradited thereunder, though Italy has always construed the word so as not to include its citizens and subjects. Ex p. Charlton, (1911) 185 Fed. 880.

Vol. VII, p. 654, art. II, par. VII.

Necessary proof.—To warrant the extradition of a person to Italy under this section, which provides for the extradition of persons charged with "the embezzlement of public moneys committed within the jurisdiction of either party by public officers or depositors," where the accused was charged with having as treasurer of a hospital embezzled its funds, it was held that the proof must show that the hospital was a public institution, that the accused, as its treasurer, was a public officer or depositor, and that the money taken was public money. Ex p. Ronchi, (1908) 164 Fed. 288.

Vol. VII, p. 656, art. III.

Construction.—This article provides that the citizens of each of the contracting parties shall receive, in the states and territories of the other, the most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are or shall be granted to the natives, on their submitting themselves to the conditions imposed on the natives, and article 23 declares that the citizens of each party shall have free access to the courts in order to maintain and defend their own rights without any other conditions, restrictions, or taxes than such as are imposed on the natives, etc. It has been held that such sections do not create in Italian subjects not resident in the United States any new or substantial rights of person or property to be enforced in the United States; their purpose, so far as they concern rights of person or property of non-resident Italians, being limited to the prevention of invidious discriminations in favor of citizens of the United States and against subjects of Italy, with respect to the enjoyment or enforcement in the United States of privileges and rights of person and property, arising and existing wholly independently of such provisions. Fulco v. Schuylkill Stone Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 98.

This article does not require a state to give the nonresident alien relatives of an Italian subject a right of action for damages for his death, although such action is afforded to native resident relatives, and although the existence of such an action may indirectly promote his safety. Maiorano v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 268, 29 S. Ct. 424, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 792.

Vol. VII, p. 749, art. II.

Failure to define exact boundary.—Failure to define the exact boundary of the Isthmian or Panama canal zone in this treaty with the Republic of Panama, does not affect the title of the United States, where description is sufficient for identification, and the boundaries have been practically identified by the concurrent action of the two nations alone interested. Wilson v. Shaw, (1907) 204 U. S. 24, 27 S. Ct. 233, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 351.

Failure to use technical terms of conveying.—The title of the United States to the Isthmian or Panama canal zone under this treaty is no less perfect because of the omission from that treaty of some of the technical terms used in ordinary conveyances of real estate. Wilson v. Shaw, (1907) 204 U. S. 24, 27 S. Ct. 233, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 351.

Vol. VII, p. 768, art. I.

Right of alien creditors.—The right of citizens of Prussia under this treaty to attend to their affairs in the United States, and for that purpose to enjoy the same security and protection as natives in the country wherein they reside, is not violated by the refusal of a state court, on grounds of public policy, to apply the doctrine of comity so as to subject by attachment, to the payment of an indebtedness due a German corporation from a German subject, a fund within the state to which one of its own citizens asserts a claim, where the effect of judgment in favor of the corporation would be to remove the fund to a foreign country, there to be administered in favor of the foreign creditors. Disconto Gesellschaft v. Umbreit, (1908) 208 U. S. 570, 28 S. Ct. 337, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 625.

Vol. VII, p. 778, art. IX.

Proceedings for surrender of deserter — right to proceeds of forfeited recognizance.—In Tucker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 386, it appeared that on demand of a Russian vice-consul process was issued by a United States commissioner, upon which a deserter from a Russian naval vessel was arrested and detained in prison for surrender to the vice-consul or master of the vessel, in accordance with the requirement of article 9 of this treaty, which provides that such assistance shall be rendered by either country to the other in such cases on proper demand and at the cost of the party making the demand. The person so held was discharged on a writ of habeas corpus by the District Court, on the ground that he was not a deserter within the meaning of the treaty, but, on an appeal being taken, such court required him to enter into a recognizance with a surety to appear and abide the judgment of the higher court. The judgment of the District Court was finally reversed by the Supreme Court, and, the defendant failing to appear, suit was brought by the United States on the recognizance, and the amount of the penalty therein was paid into court by the surety. It was held that the recognizance was not taken for the benefit of the vice-consul of the Russian government, and that the court had no power under the treaty or any rule of comity to award the amount recovered thereon to him in reimbursement for costs expended in the proceedings.

Vol. VII, p. 815, art. III.

Obligations of reincorporated municipality.—The present city of Manila, reincorporated by the Philippine Commission with substantially the same municipal powers, area, and inhabitants as the Spanish municipality of the same name, is liable upon municipal obligations incurred prior to the cession of the Philippine Islands by the treaty of Paris of Dec. 10, 1898, to the United States. Vilas v. Manila, (1911) 220 U. S. 345, 31 S. Ct. 416, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 491.

Vol. VII, p. 817, art. VIII.

Public property belonging to the city of Manila as a municipal corporation cannot be regarded as having passed to the United States under the cession by Spain of the Philippine Islands for a cash consideration, under the treaty of Paris, of all "buildings, wharves, barracks, forts, structures, public highways, and other immovable property which, in conformity with law, belong to the public domain, and as such belongs to the Crown of Spain," especially in view of the further stipulation protecting and safeguarding the property and property rights of municipal corporations precisely as were those individuals. Vilas v. Manila, (1911) 220 U. S. 345, 31 S. Ct. 416, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 491.

Office of solicitor of the courts of first instance.—The protection accorded to the property or rights of private individuals by this treaty does not extend to the office of solicitor of the courts of first instance of the capital of Porto Rico, lawfully purchased in perpetuity, prior to the occupancy of Porto Rico by the military authorities of the United States, and the cession of that island to the

An hereditary franchise, granted by the Spanish Crown and appurtenant to the office of "alguacil mayor" of Havana, giving the exclusive right of slaughtering cattle in the city of Havana, was held to constitute private property, within the protection of this treaty, of which the owner could not lawfully be deprived without compensation by the military governor. O'Reilly de Camara v. Brooke, (1905) 135 Fed. 384.

The Roman Catholic church in Porto Rico must be regarded as a legal personality, with capacity to sue and to take and hold property, in view of the law and history of the Roman Empire, of Spain, and Porto Rico down to the time of the cession to the United States, and of the recognition accorded to it as an ecclesiastical body by this treaty, and by the law of nations. Ponce v. Roman Catholic Apostolic Church, (1908) 210 U. S. 296, 28 S. Ct. 737, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1068.

Jurisdiction of courts taken away. — In Ex p. Anderson, (1910) 184 Fed. 114, the second paragraph of this article was held to govern in all matters of difference between the captain of a Norwegian vessel lying in a port of the United States, or the officer then in command of the vessel, and a member of the crew, relating to a matter of the ship's discipline, whether the occurrences complained of took place on the vessel or on the wharf at which she lay, and that where all parties concerned were citizens of Norway, and the affair was not of such seriousness as to disturb the public peace, the local courts were without jurisdiction to arrest and detain officers of the ship on warrants issued at the instance of a seaman whether before or after his discharge from the vessel.

Effect of treaty. — By the convention concluded at Brussels Dec. 14, 1900, by the International Conference for the Protection of Industrial Property, at which the United States was represented, it was among other things ordained: "Art. 4 bis. Patents applied for in the different contracting states by persons admitted to the benefit of the convention under the terms of articles 2 and 3, shall be independent of the patents obtained for the same invention in the other states, adherents or nonadherents to the Union. This provision shall apply to patents existing at the time of its going into effect. The same rule applies in the case of adhesion of new states to patents already existing on both sides at the time of the adhesion." This convention was ratified by the Senate March 7, 1901, and proclaimed by the President to go into effect Sept. 14, 1902, 32 Stat. L. 1936. It has been held that such treaty was self-executing, and the effect of its ratification was a complete doing away with the interdependence of foreign and domestic patents, and of the limitation imposed on the term of domestic patents for inventions previously patented in foreign countries by R. S. sec. 4887, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 468, prior to its amendment in 1897. Hennebique Constr. Co. v. Myers, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 869.

WAR DEPARTMENT AND MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

A minor cannot lawfully be enlisted in any branch of the military or naval service without the consent of his parents, and one who has so enlisted by misrepresenting his age will be discharged by writ of habeas corpus at suit of his parents. Ex p. Houghton, (1904) 129 Fed. 239.

In Ex p. Lewkowitz, (1908) 163 Fed. 646, it was said: "It is well settled that an enlistment in the army by a minor without his parents' consent is valid as to the minor, although voidable, under section 1117 of the U. S. R. S., on the application of the parent. In re Morrissey, (1890) 137 U. S. 157, 11 S. Ct. 57, 34 U. S. (L. ed.) 644; In re Miller, (1902) 114 Fed. 838, 52 C. C. A. 472. As the enlistment is valid as to the minor, any military offense committed by him after or in connection with his enlistment may be punished; and the fact that he enlisted without his parents' consent, or that, after the military authorities have instituted proceedings against him, his parent has instituted legal proceedings for his release, does not deprive the military authorities of the power to punish. In re Scott, (1906) 144 Fed. 79, 75 C. C. A. 237; Moore v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 701; In re Dowd, (1898) 90 Fed. 718; In re Carver, (1906) 142 Fed. 623."

The marine corps of the United States is not a part of the navy, and enlistments therein are not governed by the statutes relating to enlistments in the navy, but by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, under whose government and control such corps is primarily placed; and such officer, having prescribed in the published regulations of his department that "the regulations for the recruiting service of the army shall be applied to the recruiting service of the marine corps, as far as practicable," the enlistment of minors therein is governed by the statutory provisions relating to army enlistments, and no person under the age of twenty-one years can lawfully enlist without the consent of his parents or guardians, as required by this section. McCalla v. Facet, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 61.

Vol. VII, p. 998, sec. 3.

Errors and injustice done in the proceedings before the examining board convened under the authority of this section, which resulted in the discharge of an officer with one year's pay, by an order made by the President in the exercise of his reserved power to review the proceedings and decisions of such board, cannot be corrected by the courts on certiorari. Reaves v. Ainsworth, (1911) 219 U. S. 296, 31 S. Ct. 230, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 225.

Due process of law.—A proceeding under this section which resulted in the discharge of an officer with one year's pay, by order of the President, was not had without jurisdiction, and hence without due process of law, because the board had previously made an order that such officer was then physically incapacitated for service from disability contracted in line of duty, but had a reasonable hope of recovery, and that he could not with safety proceed with his examination, since such order was merely provisional, and not a final decision, which, under the law, would have entitled him to be retired with three-quarters pay for life. Reaves v. Ainsworth, (1911) 219 U. S. 296, 31 S. Ct. 230, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 225.

Vol. VII, p. 1013, sec. 1229.

A cadet in the United States Military Academy at West Point is not an officer in the army, within the meaning of this section. Hartigan v. U. S., (1905) 198 U. S. 169, 25 S. Ct. 204, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 434.

The act of the governor of a state in relieving an officer of the National Guard of his command, does not constitute a removal of the officer from his office, within the meaning of this section. State v. Jelks, (1903) 138 Ala. 115, 35 So. 60.

Vol. VII, p. 1017, sec. 1242.

This section is not a criminal statute. It simply prohibits the disposition of the military stores of the United States, except as they are issued to soldiers in the service of the United States. U. S. v. Smith, (1907) 156 Fed. 859. See also Ontai v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 310.

Retention of title by government.—This section, taken in connection with section 3748, makes it clear that in supplying the recruit with an equipment suitable and necessary for the discharge of his military duties the government has been very careful to retain title to the same. It would seem to be public property, whether it remains in depot or is put in the possession of the individual soldier. The circumstance that, when his term expires, he is allowed to retain such articles of clothing as he has then in use, does not change the character of his holding while he is in the service of the government. Lobosco v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 183 Fed. 742.

Vol. VII, p. 1038, sec. 1262.

The "pay proper" on which the percentage of increased pay to an army officer serving in the Philippine Islands is to be computed, under Acts of May 26, 1900, and March 2, 1901, includes the longevity pay to which he is entitled under this section, as well as the minimum pay prescribed by section 1261. U. S. v. Mills, (1905) 197 U. S. 223, 25 S. Ct. 434, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 732.

Vol. VII, p. 1070, sec. 1.

A constable may arrest a deserter in any part of the state without a warrant. State v. Pritchett, (1909) 219 Mo. 696, 119 S. W. 386.

Vol. VII, p. 1073, sec. 1. [Act of March 2, 1901.]

Refusal to answer on advice of counsel.—Where a civilian subpoenaed was advised by competent counsel that certain questions asked of him with reference to a publication concerning an army rifle contest, if answered, might subject him to a civil or criminal prosecution for libel, and for this reason he refused to answer on advice of counsel, and not from any evil intent or with legal malice, his refusal did not constitute a violation of such Act. U. S. v. Praeger, (1907) 149 Fed. 474.

Waiver of jury trial.—In a proceeding to punish a civilian for refusal to testify before a general military court-martial under this Act, the parties may waive a jury by written stipulation. U. S. v. Praeger, (1907) 149 Fed. 474.

WATERS.

Vol. VII, p. 1090, sec. 2339.

Reason for statute.—This and the following section (R. S. secs. 2339 and 2840) do not contemplate that the privilege of appropriating water or the right to occupy outside land for the purpose of its conveyance to the land of the appropriator should be unrestricted. The reason for the law was the necessity for the use of water upon the land which existed in the sections of country to which its provisions were intended to be applicable. Those sections, without the right to use water upon them, taken from the public domain, would have remained a wilderness. Where the water must be brought from a distance, unless the appropriator could convey it over the intervening land, the privilege would be useless. The rights recognized by the statute therefore spring from necessity, and the necessity is common to all the settlers in the neighborhood; so that, in order that others may not suffer injury, the rights of the appropriator, both as to water and right of way, are limited by his needs. Bogolino v. Giorgetta, (1904) 20 Colo. App. 338, 78 Pac. 612.

Who may appropriate.—One who completes a ditch across public lands for irrigation purposes, and who is in possession thereof at the time another makes his homestead entry on the lands, acquires a right of way across the lands, and the homesteader takes his homestead subject to such right of way. Cottonwood Ditch Co. v. Thom, (1909) 39 Mont. 115, 101 Pac. 825.

An appropriation of water by "squatter's right," not recognized by the laws of the state, the decisions of its courts, nor the general, well-recognized or widely respected custom therein, does not, by virtue of this section, give to the settler who has appropriated water in that way for a less period than ten years an exclusive right as against other settlers upon the same stream. Meng v. Coffee, (1903) 67 Neb. 500, 93 N. W. 713.

But a settler who so appropriates water, and afterwards duly enters and receives a patent to the land from the government, may, as against other patentees from the government upon the same stream, count the time during which he appropriated the water as a mere squatter in making out the statutory period of prescription. Meng v. Coffee, (1903) 67 Neb. 500, 93 N. W. 713.

What waters may be appropriated.—This section does not authorize one person to go on the private property of another to make an appropriation except by condemnation proceedings; the general government having merely authorized the prospective appropriator to go on the public domain for that pur-

It can make no difference that the waters collecting and forming what is known as a spring are seepage and percolating waters, rather than from a well-defined subterranean stream, so long as such waters gravitate to and collect at a certain and definite point and there constitute a volume of water known and designated as a spring. In either case such waters found upon the public domain, when subject to location and appropriation for any useful or beneficial purposes under the state statutes, are protected and reserved from future disposition under this section. Le Quime v. Chambers, (1908) 15 Idaho 405, 98 Pac. 415.

As long as land belongs to the United States as a part of the public domain, the water flowing over the same in nonnavigable streams is subject to appropriation for the purposes recognized and acknowledged by the local laws, customs, or decisions of the courts; and the mere fact that a stream traversing such public lands may border at some point or for some space on a specific territory reserved by the government for some particular governmental use or purpose will not of itself destroy the public character of its waters, which remain subject to appropriation the same as though the reserve had not been created, unless by the creation thereof there was a competent reservation of the waters also for use in connection therewith. U. S. v. Conrad Invest. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 123.

In an action involving an alleged appropriation of certain springs, it appeared that certain so-called "springs" occupied a space of about one-half an acre, and that during a portion of the year about ten acres were marshy, and a witness testified that the springs rested right on the brow of a drop-off; that there was quite a bit of water standing around in the springs, and it looked as if there might be five or six springs; but the evidence showed that there was no stream leading into them, and that the water therefrom formed no channel or stream in leaving, though during a portion of the wet season some of the water would flow down for a short distance on the side hill, where it would disappear in the soil. It was held that the pools of water were not live springs, and that they constituted nothing more than a bog occasioned by seepage water. Dickey v. Madox, (1908) 48 Wash. 411, 93 Pac. 1090.

Reserved lands.—The creation by the government of an Indian reservation on the public lands bordering on a nonnavigable stream operates as a reservation of so much of the waters of such stream as may be required by the proper needs of the government for use on the reservation for the benefit of the Indians thereon; but any surplus remains subject to appropriation by others in accordance with the local laws and customs, and such right includes the right to erect necessary dams, although they may rest in part on the lands of the reservation. U. S. v. Conrad Invest. Co., (1907) 156 Fed. 123.

Priority of appropriation. — The broad principle which underlies the relative rights of appropriators from the same stream is, that whoever is first in time is first in right, and the fact that the stream the waters of which are appropriated is interstate and nonnavigable does not affect the rule. Bean v. Morris, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 651.

One who by prior appropriation has acquired a right to the waters of a stream flowing through the public lands, for irrigation purposes, is protected in such right, as against subsequent appropriators, although the latter withdrew the water within a different state. Morris v. Bean, (1903) 123 Fed. 618.

One who has acquired a right to the use of water from a stream flowing through the public land, for domestic or irrigation purposes, in accordance with the laws of the state, is protected therein; and the jurisdiction of a federal court to determine the conflicting rights of parties is not affected by the fact that their lands and their points of diversion of the water are in different states. Anderson v. Bassman, (1905) 140 Fed. 14.

Where the water rights under which plaintiffs claimed title were located prior to any settlement on the lands by defendant's grantors, the plaintiffs are entitled to priority. Driskill v. Rebbe, (1908) 22 S. D. 242, 117 N. W. 135.

Where plaintiff posted notices of appropriation of water flowing from certain artesian wells on the public domain, and thereafter proceeded within sixty days to construct her ditches, etc., which work she prosecuted continuously until enjoined, her rights to the water flowing from the wells were prior to those acquired by a locator of the land as a homestead after the posting of the notices. De Wolfskill v. Smith, (1907) 5 Cal. App. 175, 89 Pac. 1001.

Where L. enters upon a tract of land claimed and held by I. as a homestead entry, and appropriates and diverts the waters of a spring thereon, and conveys the same by means of a pipe to other lands, and thereafter I.'s homestead entry is canceled and C. enters the land as a homestead, the latter takes the same subject to the burden and servitude of L.'s water appropriation and easement, and under the statute of this state and this section such water right and easement will be protected by the courts. Le Quime v. Chambers, (1908) 15 Idaho 405, 98 Pac. 415.

Where an irrigation company built its canal on government land after plaintiff had filed his homestead entry on it, but before patent was issued to him, the patent was not subject to the rights of the company. Atkin- son v. Washington Irrigation Co., (1906) 44 Wash. 75, 86 Pac. 1123.

An adverse use of the waters of a stream to give a right to such use by prescription as against another user must have been to the detriment of the latter, and continued with his acquiescence during the full period of the statute of limitations under a claim of right. So long as there was such quantity of water in a stream that the use of a portion of it by defendants did not deprive plaintiffs of the quantity to which they were entitled, or so long as, when the quantity became insufficient, plaintiffs forcibly prevented its use by defendants, the statute did not run against an action by plaintiffs to establish a priority of right. Anderson v. Bassman, (1905) 140 Fed. 14.

Rights acquired by appropriation. — The rights which one may acquire in government land for conducting and storing water, and subject to which the patentee shall take the land, spring from necessity only. Boglino v. Giorgetta, (1904) 20 Colo. App. 338, 78 Pac. 612.

This section does not create rights, but is a recognition by Congress of a pre-existing right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continuance. Mohl v. Lamar Canal Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 776.

Vested rights in public lands to a right of way for ditches, canals, or reservoirs, for water purposes, are not acquired until the actual completion of the work, so that the water can be applied to beneficial use. U. S. v. Rickey Land, etc., Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 496.

One who has constructed upon the vacant public lands of the United States a system of reservoirs and ditches for the distribution of water appropriated by him for irrigation purposes, and has secured the approval of his plan and appropriation by the state board of irrigation, and was using his said reservoirs and ditches for the storage and distribution of such waters before said lands are entered, has a vested and accrued right within the meaning of sections 2339 and 2340 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. Rasmussen v. Blust, (1909) 85 Neb. 198, 122 N. W. 862.

Rights acquired under this section are not forfeited by failure to comply with the Act of March 3, 1891, secs. 18, 20, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 508-510, granting the right of way to canal and ditch companies for irrigation purposes. Cottonwood Ditch Co. v. Thom, (1909) 39 Mont. 121, 104 Pac. 281.

The federal Supreme Court will assume, in the absence of state legislation to the contrary, that prior appropriators of the waters of an interstate stream at a point in Wyoming could acquire rights as against junior appropriators of the waters of the same stream in Montana, enforceable in the latter state. Bean v. Morris, (1911) 221 U. S. 485, 31 S. Ct. 703, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 821.

Where defendants had acquired a right of way for an irrigation ditch across certain land, when it was unoccupied public land of the United States, as authorized by this statute, they had no right by reason of such casement, after plaintiff acquired title to the land and without his consent, to construct an additional ditch on a different line varying one to twenty feet distant from the line of the old ditch. Vestal v. Young, (1905) 147 Cal. 715, 82 Pac. 381.

Extent and purposes of appropriation.—Appropriation of considerable quantities of water in seasons when that may be done without sensible injury to lower owners does not give a prescriptive right to divert the whole stream in dry seasons. Meng v. Coffee, (1903) 87 Neb. 500, 93 N. W. 713.

Diversion in another state.—In California the common-law rule of riparian rights, and not that of prior appropriation, governs the right to use water from a stream for purposes of irrigation, each riparian owner having the right to make a reasonable use of a reasonable quantity of water on his land. In Nevada the rule of priority of appropriation governs without reference to whether or not the lands are riparian. Riparian owners of lands on a stream in California and appropriators of waters for irrigation purposes from the same stream lower down in Nevada are equally protected in the rights given them by the laws of the respective states, both subject to the limitation that a reasonable quantity of water only for the beneficial use to which it was devoted should be taken; that it should be economically distributed, and the surplus unused returned to the stream; and where the quantity of water in the stream was at times insufficient even for the users in California they would be restrained from diverting water from the stream during such part of the time as would give to the lower users in Nevada their just share. Anderson v. Basaman, (1905) 140 Fed. 14.

Vol. VII, p. 1098, sec. 1.

Condemnation.—In a proceeding by the United States to condemn land for reservoir purposes under this Act, whether a more feasible plan of irrigation than the one adopted might be devised, or some other site selected for the reservoir, is immaterial; the determination of the proper government authorities being conclusive. U. S. v. Burley, (1909) 172 Fed. 615.

land. Burley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 1.

State laws.—This Act not only recognizes the constitution and laws of the state providing for the appropriation of its waters and the reclamation of its arid lands, but it requires that the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the provisions of the Act, shall proceed in conformity with such laws. Burley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 1.

Vol. VII, p. 1099, sec. 3.

Withdrawals.—This section provides for two classes of withdrawals, and the exception of homestead entry from the second has no application to the first; withdrawals and reservations thereunder being, from the necessity of the case, absolute. U. S. v. Hanson, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 881.

Withdrawals under the first clause are not subject to location for mining purposes, being reserved for government use, while lands withdrawn under the second clause are disposed of only for homesteads, and as all lands open to homestead entry are subject to mining location, lands withdrawn under the second clause are so subject. Loney v. Scott, (Ore. 1910) 112 Pac. 172.

Vol. VII, p. 1099, sec. 4.

The secretary may establish rules regulating the use of the withdrawn lands while not needed for the purpose for which they are reserved, and may lease them for grazing and limit the number of animals to be grazed thereon; the revenue derived from the leases going into the reclamation fund provided by the Act. Clyde v. Cummings, (1909) 35 Utah 461, 101 Pac. 106.

Charges.—The Secretary of the Interior, being authorized to tax and determine the charges, was authorized to divide the same into two parts, one for construction, and the other for maintenance and operation; and hence he was authorized to impose reasonable assessments on land irrigated prior to the time when payment of the major portion of the cost of construction had been made, and the works passed under management of the owners of the irrigated land. U. S. v. Cantrall, (1910) 176 Fed. 949.

Where, by a contract between the United States and landowners tributary to a federal irrigation system, such landowners agreed to pay to the United States the charges duly levied against their lands for the construction and maintenance of the system, they were only liable for such reasonable charges as the government was authorized to collect, proportionate to their share of the cost of maintaining and operating the system, and not such as might be arbitrarily fixed in advance by such secretary or other governmental officer. U. S. v. Cantrall, (1910) 176 Fed. 949.

WITNESSES.

This section was amended by the Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3808, 34 Stat. L. 618. See 1909 Supp., p. 709, and the annotation thereof, infra, this Supplement.

This statute is a remedial one, intended to remove technical disqualification in the common-law rules of evidence and to promote the fair administration of justice, and to be liberally construed. It is a complete abolition of the rule of exclusion under the common law in all of the courts of the United States. By it interested parties, except those named in the proviso, are placed upon a footing of equality with all other witnesses, so that they may testify for themselves and be compelled to testify for others. Huntington Nat. Bank v. Huntington Distilling Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 240.

Effect of statute.—This section leaves the witness subject to the common-law rule of having his testimony weighed by the jury in the light of his interest in the case, and to what extent that interest may affect his credibility. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton, (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 599.

It does not render a witness incompetent merely because he may have an interest in a question at issue, where he is not a party to the suit. British, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Worrill, (1909) 168 Fed. 120.

It makes a party to the suit competent to testify unless the other party is an executor, administrator, or guardian. The courts have no authority to add others to the exception; nor can this be done by state legislation. Miller v. Steele, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 714.

It has been further held that the competency of parties as witnesses in the federal courts depends upon the Acts of Congress as codified in this section. It is not derived from the statutes of any state, and is not subject to the condition and qualifications imposed by the state laws, nor is it subject to other exceptions and qualifications imposed by such state laws. Huntington Nat. Bank v. Huntington Distilling Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 240.

Admissibility of evidence.—This section relates only to the competency of the witnesses, and not to the admissibility of evidence. Downs v. Wall, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 657.

This section does not apply to criminal cases tried in the federal courts, where the competency of witnesses is to be determined by the law of the state in which the court is held as it existed when the courts of the United States were established by the Judiciary Act of 1789. U. S. v. Hughes, (1892) 175 Fed. 238.

State laws.—In a proceeding in a federal court, the competency of a witness to testify to a transaction with a deceased person which is covered by this section is to be governed by this section, and not by the statutes of the state. Smith v. Au Gres Tp., (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 257.

Action against legatee.—This section does not incapacitate a plaintiff from testifying in an action against a legatee for services rendered testator. Miller v. Steele, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 714.

The proviso of this section applies only to parties to the record, and does not exclude parties interested in a suit but not parties to the record. British, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Worrill, (1909) 168 Fed. 120.

A bankrupt's trustee being privy with him, a witness was entitled to testify after the death of the bankrupt to admissions made by the bankrupt concerning his estate while he was yet owner thereof. Smith v. Au Gres Tp., (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 257.

Vol. VII, p. 1121, sec. 876.

Number of witnesses limited.—It is within the discretion of the trial court to limit the number of defendant's witnesses to be so subpoenaed to four on each particular point named in defendant's prospectus. O'Hara v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 551.

In criminal cases.—This section does not authorize either a district judge or a United States commissioner to summon a witness in a criminal case beyond the state to appear at a preliminary hearing before the commissioner, such hearing not being one of the stages of the case before the court. U. S. v. Stern, (1910) 177 Fed. 479.

Distance.—The process of the court will not issue to compel a witness to travel a greater distance than 100 miles to attend the trial of a cause. Blood v. Morrin, (1905) 140 Fed. 918.

Vol. VII, p. 1122, sec. 877.

Number of names on one subpoena.—The names of as many witnesses in the same cause as convenience of service will permit are to be included in one subpoena, requiring the witnesses to attend and testify generally, i. e., either before the grand jury or petit jury, or both. In re Shaw, (1909) 172 Fed. 520.

Vol. VII, p. 1127, sec. 850.

Officers in the military service.—This section includes officers in the military service, and when the United States recovers a judgment it is entitled to have included therein as costs the necessary expenses of such witnesses in lieu of mileage and per diem, and it is immaterial whether the distance traveled was more or less than 100 miles. U. S. v. National Surety Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 314.

Expenses of government employees.—The United States, when the prevailing party in a suit in the federal court, is entitled to tax as costs the necessary expenses of a salaried employee taken away from his place of business to attend as a witness for the government, regardless of the distance traveled by him. U. S. v. Southern Pac. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 909.

Subpoena duces tecum.—To the same effect as the original note. In re Outcault, (1906) 149 Fed. 228.

1909 Supp., p. 708, sec. 858.

Equity suits.—This statute applies as well to suits in equity as to actions at law. Rowland v. Biesecker, (1910) 181 Fed. 128.

Patent infringement suit by assignee of owner since deceased.—Under this section construed in connection with the New York statute (Code Civ. Proc. N. Y., sec. 829) it has been held that the testimony of a defendant in a patent infringement suit brought in that state by an assignee, as to personal transactions between himself and the complainant's assignor, since deceased, is incompetent. Rowland v. Biesecker, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 515.
